Europeans talk tough on terror

STRASBOURG, France (AP). – The European Parliament called Thursday on the governments of the 12 Common Market nations to set up a central anti-terrorist office and to strengthen extradition treaties.

In a resolution adopted by an overwhelming majority, the EC legislature reacted angrily to the recent wave of terrorism. But it also condemned the EC for failing to cooperate in combating terrorism.

The parliament appealed to Arab countries to "distance themselves unequivocally" from the terrorist attack of recent days and to "deprive terrorist organizations" of their logistical support.

The hijacking last Friday of a Pan Am jetliner in Karachi and the attack on a Jewish congregation at an Istanbul synagogue the following day and an explosion at a Paris post office last Tuesday claimed nearly 50 lives.

"Only a decisive action at the European level" can deal with terrorism, Derek Prag, a British Conservative, said in parliament.

The parliament's resolution said the Arab-Israeli conflict is at the root of the international terrorism and urged the EC foreign ministers to "initiate genuine community involvement" in the Middle East peace negotiations.

Only the Communist group voted against the emergency motion carried by 193 votes to 11 with one abstention, which regretted previous declarations by EC foreign ministers on the issue had not resulted in concrete action.

Poles set to free detainees

WARSAW. – Polish authorities will free 225 political prisoners under an act of clemency by next Monday state television reported yesterday.

The official PAP news agency also revealed that police questioned more than 3,000 people in an attempt to expose illegal groups and activities. Equipment was confiscated but no charges were pressed.

Interior Minister General Czeslaw Kiszczak was quoted as saying that those to be released would include Solidarity's underground leaders Zbigniew Bujak, Tadeusz Jedynak and Bogdan Borusewicz, who were all awaiting trial.

Wage talks break down

By ROY ISACOWITZ
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Histadrut Trade Union Department Chairman Haim Haberfeld has called an emergency meeting of union leaders this morning to discuss the breakdown last night of wage talks in the private sector.

The talks between the Histadrut and the Coordinating Bureau of Economic Organizations, representing the private-sector employers, were unable to resolve their differences over the level of the proposed minimum wage and the length of the agreement.

Dow plunges

The Dow Jones Industrial Average plunged 87 points yesterday – its sharpest one-day loss ever – as a wave of panic selling gripped the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow, the most widely followed market indicator, ended trading yesterday at 1793, as the number of shares changing hands in the market approached a record high. Traders attributed the massive sell-off largely to concern over rising interest rates.

Palestinian issue dominates summit

By YEHUDA LITANI, HIRSH GOODMAN and BENNY MORRIS in Alexandria

Prime Minister Shimon Peres, at the end of his first day of talks with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, told reporters late last night that Mubarak had not tried to press him to deviate from the national unity government guidelines on the Palestinian question.

Mubarak, speaking separately to newsmen after last night's talks, praised Israel for its flexibility on the Palestinian issue and criticized the PLO and the other Arab states for their intransigence.

"The Israeli position is improving a lot concerning the Palestinians," Mubarak told newsmen at the end of his three-hour meeting with Peres, which was dominated by the Palestinian issue. He did not elaborate, but referred newsmen to the joint communique planned for the end of the summit today. Israeli and Egyptian officials were still working hard last night to hammer out the communique.

Peres, however, said that for lack of time a joint communique might not be issued. But he stressed that in most matters of principle "understanding had been reached."

Mubarak was highly critical of the PLO and Arab states for their attitude. He told reporters that recent political actions by the PLO should be criticized, saying: "We mustn't ask Israel to make the effort (for peace) alone."

He slammed the PLO for freezing the Amman agreement, signed between King Hussein and PLO chairman Yasser Arafat on February 11, 1985, in which the PLO committed itself to coordinate its political line with the king. The freezing of this agreement "has put us in a difficult position while we are proceeding in our talks to solve the Palestinian question," Mubarak said.

He called on the Palestinian factions to reach agreement among themselves.

Asked about Jordan's participation in peace talks, he said only that Jordan is "an important partner in the peace process."

Neither Israel nor Egypt expects the summit to produce concrete results, it emerged from yesterday's talks. But further talks, possibly between working committees, are likely to continue, in an effort to achieve Jordanian-Palestinian participation in broader peace negotiations.

Mubarak said also that Egypt and Israel did not differ much over an international Middle East peace conference.

"There are no large differences concerning the international conference," a smiling Mubarak told reporters.

"The international conference is on the agenda but this should not negate the need for direct negotiations," the president said, citing the 1979 Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty as a product of direct negotiations.

Peres said that he and Mubarak agreed in principle on an international conference, but said that some "minor" differences existed on technical matters. Peres conceded that Mubarak still insists on the participation of the permanent members of the UN Security Council, including the Soviet Union.

While hopeful that an international conference would be convened in the foreseeable future, Peres said that one major component – the Palestinians – was still missing. The main problem was the basic difference in viewpoints between Jordan and the PLO. "The problem is not in Israeli policy-making, but in the Arab world," he said.

Peres emphasized that the international conference, which after an initial meeting would break up into regional committees, would not have the power to dictate conditions or a settlement.

On bilateral relations, Peres said that they had been "rusty" but now, during the summit, they were rehabilitated. "I had not imagined that there would be such hospitality and warmth," he said.

Peres said that he and Mubarak had "talked about everything – just about" including the Iraq-Iran war, and Libya's recent offer to China for union. He revealed this last piece of information with a smile on his face.

Peres revealed that on his trip to the U.S. next week he would not ask for greater American involvement in the Middle East peace process and said that he understood the American influence on this point. "There is wisdom in reserved involvement," he remarked.

Then the flags came out

By BENNY MORRIS
Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

ALEXANDRIA. – The palms swayed gently in the Mediterranean breeze outside the ornate Ras A-Tin palace yesterday, but no Israeli flag rustled in the wind.

That was the scene as several hundred journalists waited for Prime Minister Peres and his entourage to arrive for his summit talks with President Mubarak.

Just one, barely discernible Israeli flag could be found: on Ambassador Moshe Sasson's limousine, parked in the courtyard.

Finally, as white-uniformed Egyptian sailors stood with their musical instruments, three large helicopters hovered into view over the palace's dome and crenellated walls, descending onto the grass amid the courtyard palms.

Israeli, western and Egyptian journalists fidgeted beside the main entrance, craning their necks to see who would emerge from each helicopter.

First emerged Peres's main guests – Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee chairman Abba Eban (who had been asked by Peres to be included in the entourage) and MK Dan Meridor, Peres's token Likud party representative. Then came Minister without Portfolio Ezer Weizman and the directors-general of the Prime Minister's Office and the Foreign Ministry, Avraham Tamir and David Kimche.

With a flourish of trumpets and a loud staccato of drums, Peres and his close aides emerged from the third helicopter.

As if by magic, two large flags suddenly rose above the walls over the main entrance to the palace, the Israeli and Egyptian national flags.

Ranks of naval cadets presented arms smartly and Hatikva was played by the brass band, followed by the Egyptian national anthem.

The palace has played an important role in Egyptian history. It was built in 1909 by Mohammed Ali, the Albanian-born officer who founded the Egyptian royal family.

It was from Ras a-Tin that the country's last monarch, King Farouk, sailed into exile aboard his private yacht in 1952 after a group of military officers led by General Naguib and Gamal Abdel-Nasser forced him to abdicate.

Peres, flanked by Egyptian Premier Ali Lutfi and led by a goose-stepping officer with a sword, inspected the guard and, turning sharply right, hailed the waiting Israeli journalists with a "shalom" and strode into the main building.

There Peres lunched with Lutfi, followed by talks between Peres and his entourage and the head of the Egyptian government – sans President Mubarak.

Despite the absence of flags and of Mubarak, the arrival of Peres, under a clear blue sky, in the courtyard of the imposing palace was a moving moment.

Jerusalem Post Reporter adds from Ben-Gurion Airport:

At the airport before leaving, Peres said: The government of Israel is determined to develop bilateral relations between our two countries and to make every effort to expand the circle of peace in our region while resolving the Palestinian problem."

Washington 'pleased'

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. – The Reagan administration was very pleased by the Israeli-Egyptian summit, but cautioned against expecting any immediate breakthrough in broader Arab-Israeli peace efforts.

U.S. officials said that Secretary of State George Shultz has no plans to return to the Middle East in the near future. They said he is tied up with other commitments in Washington for the time being.

They noted, however, that if Israel and Egypt had managed to overcome their final Taba-related disputes a few days earlier, the secretary would have been prepared to participate in the Peres-Mubarak summit and to visit other countries in the region this week. "Now," an American official said, "it's too late."

Peres is scheduled to meet in Washington on Monday with Shultz, President Reagan and other senior U.S. officials. In the aftermath of the prime minister's summit yesterday, U.S. officials said, that visit to Washington has taken on greater importance.

The Americans are anxious to try to generate some momentum in peace efforts even in these final days of Peres's term in office.

U.S. may upgrade Israel status

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. – The Reagan Administration yesterday promised Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin that it would seriously consider Israel's request for official recognition as "a major non-Nato ally."

Meeting with Israeli reporters following his sessions with Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State George Shultz, Rabin said that he was not offered any flat promise that Israel would eventually obtain this changed status in the relationship.

"But they promised to give it their full consideration," he said, noting that such a change would open the door to considerable economic and military benefits for Israel.

The need for Israel to obtain "equal treatment" with America's Nato allies in purchasing U.S. weapons and in winning U.S. defence contracts, Rabin said, was thoroughly discussed during his sessions at the Pentagon, the State Department and the White House.

Rabin also met yesterday with National Security Adviser John Poindexter and is due to meet today with Vice President George Bush.

The long road to a Taba accord

By HIRSH GOODMAN
and YEHUDA LITANI
Jerusalem Post Correspondents

ALEXANDRIA. – The compromis agreement on the Taba issue signed yesterday in Cairo at 2:30 a.m. was made possible by the magic words "approximate locations" – two words that took Israeli and Egyptian negotiators 11 days to hammer out. The compromis document, which has not been released at Egyptian insistence, is eight pages long and comprises two sections: the questions the sides will place before the arbitrators and the replies of the two countries to those questions. Israeli and Egyptian officials yesterday said that the arbitration process could take as long as a year.

For the past five days, as the clock for the scheduled summit between Prime Minister Peres and President Mubarak was running out, negotiators spent 18 to 20 hours a day searching for a mutually acceptable formula that would answer Egypt's demand that Israel name a specific spot where it believes the Taba border should pass, and Israel's position that no specific spot be named since it is not sure where the 1906 border line is. It was not until 10 p.m. Wednesday night, after tremendous American pressure was placed on both sides, that the Egyptians agreed to the term "approximate locations" that finally resolved the issue. To narrow the term, Israel named two spots, 60 metres apart, where it believes border marker No. 91 should be.

Also under discussion in recent days was the question of who the arbitrators would be. On Tuesday morning, negotiators agreed to two international arbitrators, who have yet to be publicly named, and agreed that the two would select a third arbitrator. The selection will not be subject to either Israeli or Egyptian approval. In addition to the three international arbitrators, one Egyptian and one Israeli will participate in the arbitration. Israel's representative will be Ruth Lapidot, formerly the Foreign Ministry's legal adviser.

The signing ceremony at the Mena House Hotel was scheduled for 11:30 p.m., but was held up for three hours because the Egyptians had "forgotten" to type up the agreement. U.S. special envoy Richard Murphy, who played a crucial role in reaching the agreement, waited with delegates from both countries and about 40 journalists from around the world for the documents to arrive.

The delegates then sat at three separate tables – the Israelis on the left, the Americans in the centre and the Egyptians on the right. Avraham Tamir, Director-General of the Prime Minister's Office, made the speech on behalf of Israel, and not the Foreign Ministry's David Kimche, who had been Israel's chief negotiator.

Speaking later on Israel Radio, Kimche said: "It seems we got more or less what we wanted in these last talks. We had a certain conception, and we stick to that conception. The arbitrators are well-known personalities in their field, that is, we are speaking about legal experts who

Two SLA men killed in clash with Shi'ites

Jerusalem Post Staff

Two Southern Lebanon Army soldiers were killed yesterday in the security zone when their hilltop position came under a pre-dawn attack by the Shi'ite Islamic Resistance militias, SLA sources said.

Five Nepalese Unifil soldiers were wounded in ensuing crossfire from an SLA reprisal launched shortly after the Shi'ites tried to overrun Hikban hill southeast of Tyre.

Three Shi'ites were also killed in the hilltop raid, Lebanese sources said. The Islamic Resistance includes members of Hizbollah and Amal militias.

The wounded Unifil soldiers were taken to Unifil's Nakoura hospital where all were reported to be out of danger, according to the UN spokesman.

Some of the more hazardous positions held by Unifil troops may be eliminated, said Marrack Goulding, UN Undersecretary-General, in an interview published in Beirut yesterday.

"We cannot allow our men to continue being fired on like rabbits," Goulding told the pro-Moslem paper A-Safir, referring to a series of recent attacks.

Bar-Lev clashes with comptroller on Suissa

By YORAM GAZIT
For The Jerusalem Post

A sharp difference of opinion emerged yesterday in the Knesset Interior Committee between the police minister and the police comptroller over the comptroller's report concerning allegations of misconduct by Prisons Service Commissioner Rafi Suissa.

Minister Haim Bar-Lev has insisted that Suissa remain in office. But Police Comptroller Avraham Adan told the committee yesterday: "The findings of the report were very serious. You had better read it."

The committee members have not yet seen the report.

In a tense, day-long meeting, Bar-Lev reviewed the misconduct allegations.

The first and most serious concerned criminal offences. Suissa was accused by three Prisons Service officials, who were transferred from their posts three months ago, of forgery, fraud and bribery. These allegations had been submitted to the police, who found no grounds for prosecution.

The second allegation concerned inaccurate and misleading information given by Suissa to the police minister. Suissa was said to have changed statistics concerning prison escapes and suicides, for example. Bar-Lev, Adan and Suissa, agreed, Bar-Lev said, that inaccurate and misleading information had been submitted to the police minister, but while Suissa said this was the result of negligence, Adan believed it was premeditated.

The third and fourth allegations concerned favouritism Suissa had shown to certain prisoners and hiring employees who were either relatives or friends of his. Bar-Lev said Suissa denied these allegations. Adan's report found that Suissa had hired persons who did not meet recruitment standards; they did not have the necessary educational background or had not served in the IDF. Suissa had explained that he had given these persons a chance to prove themselves and had fired those who were found unfit.

Suissa also admitted, said Bar-Lev, that he had allowed some prisoners and their relatives "freedom of movement." Some prisoners who were his relatives were sometimes allowed to go on leave and their relatives were allowed to visit them in violation of regulations.

Suissa, said Bar-Lev, justified what he had done on humanitarian grounds. The minister later told reporters: "His misconduct was the result of his soft heart."

The fifth allegation concerned Suissa's extra-marital relations. Bar-Lev rejected these allegations,

Postman's error leads police to 'opium candy'

TEL AVIV (Itim). – A package of pistachio nuts from Turkey that was delivered to the wrong address in Bat Yam has led to the arrest of a 26-year-old woman who may be part of a gang of drug-smugglers, police reported yesterday.

The woman who received the package roasted the nuts in her oven, but when black liquid oozed out of them, she notified the police who identified it as 17 grams of opium. The police investigation led to the 26-year-old woman, also from Bat Yam, in whose apartment they reportedly found large quantities of opium wrapped in cellophane to look like candy.

Arab states warn of Egypt's isolation

Post Middle East Staff

The Arab world greeted yesterday's Israeli-Egyptian summit with warnings that the meeting would heighten Egypt's isolation and spark domestic unrest similar to that which had led to president Anwar Sadat's assassination.

Throughout yesterday, Radio Damascus intensified its attacks on the Peres-Mubarak meeting, describing it as "a process crowning the concessions and retreat which Mubarak is offering to Israel."

In a lengthy evening programme beamed at Egypt, broadcasters urged Egyptians to rise up against the Mubarak government in protest over the summit.

In Egypt's opposition press, Peres was described yesterday by the leftist Nasserite party as a "Zionist war criminal."

The opposition paper, A-Sha'ab asserted that Moscow should not be excluded from Middle East negotiations.

According to Agence France Presse, the Soviet Union is taking a reserved attitude toward the summit, because it believes it will benefit from a normalization in Egyptian-Israeli relations.

Observers in Moscow told AFP that the Kremlin believes normalization will allow the Soviet Union to make its views heard by Israel through Egypt, with which the Soviet Union has improved relations.

In Amman, political sources were quoted as saying that they hoped the summit would not hinder the return of Egypt to the Arab arena.

The sources told Radio Monte Carlo that Egypt must continue to demand an international peace conference, recognition of the Palestinian right to self-determination in the framework of a Jordanian-Palestinian federation, and an Israeli pledge to refrain from changing the Arab character of the territories.

Beirut papers made ominous comparisons between the summit and the "pre-Sadat assassination era."

"The Egyptian president has turned (Egypt) back another page toward the pre-Sadat assassination era of October 1981, which was characterized by peace with Israel and an alliance with the U.S.," said the independent Al-Nahar.

Beirut's pro-Syrian paper, Al-Sharq said the summit places before Egyptians the same "challenge" which followed the Sadat visit to Jerusalem in 1977.

European synagogues tighten security

By LISA BILLIG PALMIERI in Rome
DAVID HOROVITZ in London and
Jerusalem Post Staff

Synagogues throughout Europe are tightening security for the coming High Holydays in the aftermath of last week's terrorist attack in Istanbul.

In Rome, Giacomo Saban, president of the Jewish community, said that security measures in Italy "are being stepped up on all fronts against terrorism. The Istanbul tragedy could take place because the community was taken completely by surprise," said Saban, who was born in Turkey.

Diplomatic pouches are no longer immune to inspection in Italy, and Jewish institutions are receiving increased police protection in anticipation of the High Holydays. Tighter controls are considered necessary because Interior Ministry figures show that an increasing number of Arabs have entered Italy recently.

A thousand people gathered yesterday at Rome's main synagogue for a memorial service for the Istanbul victims. Jewish leaders were joined by Vatican officials and local political personalities, as well as ambassadors and representatives from the U.S., Israel and Turkey.

In London, synagogues are tightening security, but Jewish leaders have denied newspaper reports that "groups of vigilantes" are on patrol.

"All our people who are engaged in security are trained," Henry Morris, head of the Board of Deputies of British Jews defence department, said yesterday. "But they are not vigilantes; they don't carry weapons."

Admitting that the board had suffered from "less than 100 per cent cooperation from synagogue authorities on security in the past," Morris said that there had been a "marked improvement" in attitude of late.

Obviously, "there is no absolute protection from lunatic bodies with guns," he added, "but hopefully our security acts as a deterrent."

Joint Distribution Committee leaders who attended the funeral of the victims are conferring with the leaders of the Jewish community in Turkey about the social welfare needs that have arisen following the attack. The JDC has received offers of assistance from many American Jewish communities, which provide the bulk of JDC funds.

In Paris, the World Jewish Congress called on all western countries to unite their efforts in combating terrorism. WJC President Edgar Bronfman said "terrorism does not strike at Jews alone. It strikes against the west and aims at destabilizing western democracies."

Bronfman called on all Jews to attend in even larger numbers than usual religious services during the coming High Holydays. Lionel Koplowicz, president of the European Jewish Congress, said, "do not give in to terrorism. Show them that they cannot intimidate us."

Previous summits

The meeting yesterday between Prime Minister Peres and Egyptian President Mubarak was the first summit between Israel and Egypt in five years. Menachem Begin and Egyptian president Anwar Sadat met 11 times. They include:

- November 19, 1977: Sadat, in a move that broke Arab ranks and stunned the world, came to Jerusalem for a two-day visit.
- December 25, 1977: Begin flew to Ismailia on the Suez Canal to present Sadat with a plan for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.
- September 6, 1978: Begin and Sadat met for 13 days with then-president Jimmy Carter at Camp David.
- March 26, 1979: Begin and Sadat met in Washington to sign the Camp David peace treaty.
- April 2, 1979: Begin went to Cairo. The first visit by an Israeli prime minister to the Egyptian capital.
- May 27, 1979: Begin, Sadat and then-secretary of state Cyrus Vance met in the Sinai town of El-Arish and flew in Sadat's plane to Beersheba.
- July 9, 1979: Begin and Sadat reached agreement in Alexandria over a plan to hand over oil wells and equipment in the Sinai.
- September 4, 1979: The two leaders met in Haifa and agreed on a plan to install a joint force to supervise Israel's pullout from the Sinai peninsula.
- January 6, 1980: In Aswan, Begin and Sadat met for four days to discuss how much autonomy to grant the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza.
- June 4, 1981: In their most unsuccessful summit, Begin and Sadat met in Ofira, in Sinai, for six hours. They failed to break the deadlock over the autonomy talks.
- August 24, 1981: Begin and Sadat met in Alexandria and agreed to renew autonomy talks.
- Sadat was assassinated on October 6 of that year. Begin went to the funeral and briefly met Mubarak. (AP)

Peres, edging close to the outer limit of the restrictive grip of the national unity government guidelines, stressed Israel's endorsement of the Palestinians' "right to participate in the determination of their future." Peres's spokesman, Uri Savir, stressed that the phrase was taken more or less verbatim from the text of the Camp David Accords. But observers here expected negative Likud and Tehiya reactions to its reiteration by Peres in the current context.

Peres, according to Savir, also stressed in his talks with Lutfi that the Palestinian "people" were like "all other peoples" in their needs and aspirations.

Lastly, Peres stressed that the "Jewish people, throughout its history" has never sought to dominate other peoples and had not done so in the past.

Lutfi reiterated Egypt's standard assertion that "the Palestinian problem is the heart of the Middle East conflict."

Lutfi viewed the summit within the context of movement towards a comprehensive settlement in the region rather than merely as a step, however significant, in the evolution of relations between the two countries.

Lutfi stressed the need for the realization of "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and of their right to self-determination."

Israeli officials described the talks with Lutfi, Maguid and the other Egyptian ministers who participated, as being conducted in a spirit "of mutual understanding" and as very "cordial."

Peres, in his remarks to Lutfi, praised Mubarak as a leader who combines the three characteristics mentioned by the Jewish philosopher Philo (of Alexandria): he functions like a "shepherd," a "housekeeper" and has self-control.

At yesterday's talks, Peres apparently proposed – for the first time – that the West Bank and Gaza Arabs be allowed to choose representatives for a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation from among Palestinians not living in the territories. But Peres apparently qualified this by adding that they could not be PLO "officials."

Peres is understood to have expressed Israel's view that Jordanian unwillingness to enter the negotiating process is "the main obstacle to progress" in the efforts to revive the peace process.

Israel, which seeks to set up low-level "working committees" including Israeli, Egyptian and Jordanian-Palestinian representatives to hammer out a formula for a full-scale high-level negotiation, has tried to induce Jordan to enter the preliminary talks, but to no avail.

Egypt has also tried to include Jordan and has held intensive contacts with the PLO in the past few days. In a message to Mubarak, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat apparently cited his recent speech at the Harare non-aligned nations' conference as progress by the Palestinians towards a formula acceptable by the U.S. and Egypt for PLO entry into the talks. But both Egypt and the U.S. apparently responded that the speech, in which Arafat said a settlement in the Middle East should be based on implementation of all relevant UN resolutions, including 242 and 338 was "insufficient."

Some of the recent contacts have been held through the Egyptian embassy in London, where King Hussein is recuperating from a sinus operation and where Lutfi recently paid a visit.

The focus in the Alexandria summit on the Palestinian issue was in large part dictated by the Israeli and U.S. perception that Mubarak had to emerge from the summit as having both concentrated on that problem in the talks and on having emerged from the talks with some measure of Israeli flexibility being displayed. Egypt has sought some concrete expressions of that flexibility going beyond the generalities uttered by Peres in the recent Ifrane meeting with Morocco's King Hassan.

Two get life sentences for murdering soldier

LOD (Itim). – Two villagers from Baka al-Gharbiya were sentenced in the military court here yesterday to life imprisonment for the murder of soldier Moshe Tamam.

Ibrahim Razek Bayadsi, and Ibrahim Nayef Abu-Moch, both 26, pleaded guilty to killing Tamam, whom they picked up hitchhiking in August 1984.

Two other men, Walid Nimr Ashad, 25, and Rushdi Hamdan Abu-Moch, 24, both also of Baka al-Gharbiya, have denied the charges and are to be tried later.

The four were arrested in March and charged with the soldier's murder as well as with membership in the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Recounting the crime before passing sentence, the three-man bench said that the accused had been under orders to kidnap a soldier and transfer him to Syria, to exchange him for Palestinian terrorists jailed in Israel. They were told that if they had trouble getting the soldier to Syria, they should kill him.

The defendants kept Tamam for two days in a house in Baka al-Gharbiya before shooting him in an olive grove near Jenin, the court said.

The trial was conducted under tight security, with hundreds of soldiers and police guarding the military court, after relatives of the dead soldier threatened to attack the defendants.

Galia Tamam, the dead soldier's mother, screamed, "Murderers, dirty Arabs, we'll kill you all," when the defendants were brought into the courtroom.

Liberal MK demands return of Moda'i

MK Dan Tichon said the Liberal Party would remove its three ministers from the government if former finance minister and justice minister Yitzhak Moda'i is not allowed to return to a ministerial position after the rotation, Israel TV reported last night.

Tichon, acting as Liberal Party chairman, was responding to Labour Party Secretary-General Uzi Baram's recent statement that his party would object to Moda'i's return to the government after the rotation.

Moda'i, the Liberal Party leader, was forced to resign from the government because of his criticism of Premier Peres.

Lawyer jailed in fraud

TEL AVIV. – A 71-year-old lawyer, convicted of cheating a widow out of her husband's life insurance, was sentenced in the Tel Aviv District Court yesterday to eight months' imprisonment.

Yosef Shafran was also found guilty of breach of trust and of submitting a false affidavit. In 1979, Shafran obtained IL22,500 in insurance money for his client for her husband's death. He deposited the money in his own bank account, and told the widow that the insurance company was willing to pay her only IL1,000.

Israeli Arab leaders split on summit talk

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Moderate Israeli Arab leaders said yesterday they welcomed any moves that could lead to a real and lasting peace in the region, but radical elements condemned the Alexandria talks, which they described as an exercise in futility.

Among the fiercest opponents of the summit were members of the Rakah (Communist) Party. Jamal Mussa, the party's representative on the Histadrut Executive, said the summit was meant to benefit the Americans more than the people of the region.

"Peace cannot be attained through negotiations with Mubarak, Hussein or other Arab leaders, only through direct talks with the PLO," said Mussa, who is a resident of Acre.

Reiterating his party's line, Mussa said Israel had first to recognize the PLO as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and their right to a state alongside Israel.

"Peace can be achieved only through an international conference, attended by the five members of the UN Security Council and representatives of Israel, the PLO and Arab countries concerned with the issue," he added.

Not all the reactions, however, were negative. Several Galilee Arabs were optimistic that the talks could breathe new life into the stalled peace efforts.

"We offer our blessing to both leaders in the hope that their negotiations will help solve the region's problems," said Sakhnin local council leader Mohammed Ghanayim.

"Even if they don't come up with immediate answers, at least they will be able to define the problems, which is the first step towards finding solutions," he asserted.

"The signing of the Taba compromis shows that complex problems can be resolved through negotiations. That in itself is a hopeful sign."

The time is ripe for a democratic referendum to enable the Palestinians to choose their representatives in future negotiations, he added.

FLAGS

He added: "I hope today we will put an end to four years of cold peace between our two countries with the return of the Egyptian ambassador to Israel and the restoration of active bilateral relations..."We shall not let the peace process wither from a lack of life giving air."

Among those who saw Peres off were Ministers Shamir, Navon, Levy Shahal, Sharon, Hurvitz, Ya'acobi, Arens, Gur, Tsur, and Peretz. Also at the airport were Knesset Speaker Shlomo Hillel, Chief of General Staff Rav-Aluf Moshe Levy, Police Inspector-General David Kraus, and representatives of the country's religious communities.

Outside the airport terminal, four Tehiya Party members warned Peres against making concessions to Egypt with a key-shaped placard bearing the words "Judea and Samaria are the key to Jerusalem. Guard them."

The group, which according to Tehiya intended to keep vigil at the airport until Peres's return, was removed yesterday evening by airport police.

Vice Premier Shamir told the Army Radio yesterday that Israeli-Egyptian relations should have been top priority at the summit.

"I think the most important issue is relations between Israel and Egypt, how to strengthen the peace and add content to it. The second issue is how to broaden the peace to include other Arab nations," he said.

Referring to the Taba compromis ratified on Wednesdat night, Shamir said: "It was what we could achieve under the circumstances. An arbitration agreement is always the result of a compromise. After all, it is only an arbitration agreement, and the arbitration process must be allowed to start. There is still a long way to go."

On the Palestinian issue he said: "We must go by the Camp David accords, which were agreed upon by both Israel and Egypt, with U.S. participation. The answer to the problems of Israel's Arabs is within the broad Camp David framework."

Speaking after yesterday's inner cabinet session, Deputy Premier David Levy said: "The prime minister declared during the meeting that he will abide faithfully by the government's guidelines, and will reject, as the government's position, any demand for Palestinian self-determination. Concerning the PLO and terror, he said he will unequivocally present the Israeli position."

AT LAST! After a marathon round of talks in Cairo on Wednesday, the director-general of the prime minister's office, Avraham Tamir, signs the Taba compromis on behalf of Israel and paves the way for yesterday's summit. Areas are cautious on summit

By JOEL GREENBERG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Peres–Mubarak summit drew a low-key reaction yesterday in the territories, as some Palestinian spokesmen expressed cautious optimism that the meeting would promote peace, while others expected little to emerge from the talks.

Supporters of Jordan generally welcomed the meeting. Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij said the summit was "necessary" and would be useful in furthering prospects for peace. He said Egypt's knowledge of the Palestinian issue makes it a suitable mediator, "and even more than that," between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians. He said the summit would be "a seed for further talks."

Othman Hallak, editor of the East Jerusalem An-Nahar newspaper, said he was "happy" that the meeting had come off and that he hoped it would be "a breakthrough on the road to a solution on the Palestinian side."

However, deposed Hebron mayor Mustafa Natshe and deposed Gaza mayor Rashad Shawwa said the meeting's value could be judged only by its results.

More hard-line PLO supporters were critical of Egypt. Akram Haniyeh, editor of the A-Sha'ab newspaper, said the summit was a departure for Mubarak, who since 1981 had been trying to freeze the peace with Israel and distance himself from the Camp David agreements to gain acceptance in the Arab world. Haniyeh said Mubarak had buckled under U.S. pressure because Egypt needs U.S. assistance to meet its massive foreign debt. He said Egypt would give only lip service to the Palestinian cause, and that the summit poses a risk for Mubarak's rule.

Deposed Nablus mayor Bassam Shak'a condemned the summit as an Egyptian attempt to "breathe new life into the Camp David agreements."

The East Jerusalem Al Quds newspaper said it hoped Egypt would insist on Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon and the territories and thus prove its desire to return to the Arab fold. Al Awdah said the summit was aimed at distracting world attention from possible Israeli and U.S. military action against Arab and PLO targets following the recent terror attacks abroad.

PLO supporters were sceptical the meeting would benefit the Palestinians. Gaza lawyer Fayez Abu Rahme, who has been named to a proposed Jordanian-Palestinian peace talk delegation, said he was "very cool" about the summit.

He said there was only a "tiny chance" the meeting would produce results because of the absence of Jordan and the PLO from the discussions.

Rahme added that Peres's imminent departure from office would hurt the prospect of implementing any agreement reached at the meeting. "If there is progress, there will not be the proper time to let it develop," he said.

"It's a step which could have been more fruitful a year ago."

Ziad Abu Zayad, editor of the Palestinian Hebrew-language Gesher newspaper, said he welcomes any peace moves, but in practice these efforts ignore the Palestinians and the PLO.

More Israeli tourists visiting Egypt since July

By YITZHAK OKED
and GREER FAY CASHMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporters

Since July, the number of tourists travelling to and from Egypt by bus has increased greatly according to Shlomo Shefi, manager of Dan bus cooperative's United Tours company.

Shefi told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that before July, there were a few dozen passengers a month. "Now it is several hundred."

Ezra Ben-Dori, manager of Galilee Tours, which operates package tours to and from Egypt in cooperation with an Egyptian company, also said that since the start of summer, more Israelis have been going to Egypt, both Jews and Arabs.

Tourist traffic from Israel to Egypt has consistently been larger than traffic in the opposite direction, but the statistics indicate that Egyptian tourism to Israel is on the rise. Some 5,200 Egyptians visited Israel in 1985, a 13 per cent increase over 1984, according to the Ministry of Tourism.

The number of visitors from Egypt has been rising since 1980, when it was 2,100. In 1981, it rose to 2,700 and in 1982, it leaped to 4,200. In 1983, it was 4,400, increasing to 4,600 in 1984.

The upward trend has continued this year, with 2,500 Egyptian tourists from January to July. This was 7 per cent more than the corresponding period last year.

However, Israeli tourism to Egypt has been declining since 1983. That year it was 35,700, but in 1984, it dropped to 34,100 and in 1985 (the year of the Ras Burka slayings of seven Israelis), the figure plunged to 28,000.

Trade with Egypt down

By AVI TEMKIN
Post Economic Reporter

Israeli exports to Egypt in the first half of 1986 totalled $3 million. By comparison, Israel's total exports last month stood at about $450m.

According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, Israel last year sold $7.8m. worth of goods to Egypt, the lowest level of exports since the two countries established ties.

Crude oil accounts for most of Israel's imports from Egypt. Israel has had long-term contracts for the purchase of Egyptian oil since 1979, but the exact amount of oil involved has not been made public. Non-oil imports from Egypt in the first half of 1986 totalled $700,000, the highest figure since the two countries began trade.

The CBS figures show that there is room for expanding agricultural exports to Egypt. From a slow start in 1979 and 1980, sales of such goods rose to some $12m. in 1981 and peaked at $25m. in 1982.

The war in Lebanon signalled a downturn in trade. Since 1982 exports to Egypt decreased steadily, dropping to some $14 million in 1984 and to $7.8m. a year later.

Daniloff spy charges

Quiet talks defuse tensions

WASHINGTON. – The Soviet ambassador met with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz for the second time in less than 24 hours to discuss imprisoned journalist Nicholas Daniloff, a U.S. official said.

The official who disclosed the meeting said the topic was certain to be Daniloff, but presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, asked about the matter, said he had nothing to report.

Meanwhile, Soviet deputy foreign minister Vladimir Petrovski said his country had contacted "the U.S. agencies concerned" about Daniloff, and "the next move lay with Washington."

"We're vigorously pursuing diplomatic channels" to secure Daniloff's release, Speakes said.

But the spokesman refused to be more specific, saying President Reagan believes confidential negotiations offer the best chance of a successful conclusion to the dispute over the arrest August 30 of Daniloff, the Moscow correspondent for U.S. News and World Report.

Reagan himself confirmed late Wednesday that he had received a message from Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev responding to the President's appeal for Daniloff's release. Reagan's letter offered his personal assurances that Daniloff is not a spy, as the Soviets have charged.

One U.S. official, who refused to be identified by name, said the Gorbachev response and a vist to the state department Wednesday evening by Soviet ambassador Yuri Dubinin suggested the Kremlin is willing to try to settle the Daniloff case and spurred a new, optimistic tone among U.S. officials working on the matter.

Several administration sources said Daniloff could be put in custody at the U.S. enbassy in Moscow to await trial. In exchange, they said, Gennadi Zakharov – a Soviet physicist at the U.N. indicted in New York on spying charges – would be put in custody of the Soviet embassy in Washington.

The officials stressed, however, that Washington had not changed its stand against a Daniloff-Zakharov swap, and claimed that the custody measure would be only a provisional solution.

Daniloff said on Wednesday that he would accept such a solution to ease East-West tensions, his wife Ruth reported after visiting him in prison. The newsman had hitherto ruled out any trade off for a spy because, he said, that would give credence to the Soviet charges.

In Moscow, Petrovski said Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George Shultz would meet in Washington next week as scheduled, despite the Daniloff affair, and the Soviet Union sees "no reason to postpone" their talks.

In addition, both diplomats and private analysts have said they were convinced that whatever short-term damage the Daniloff affair has caused, Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev still want a summit despite saying they could make do without one.

FOREIGN NEWS IN BRIEF

Nakasone wins one more year

TOKYO (AP). – Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone won formal approval Thursday for one more year as party president, thus also extending his term as prime minister, a party spokesman sai.

Spokesman Yoshiro Yamaguchi of the Liberal Democratic Party said the decision to extend Nakasone's term to October 1987 reflects the Prime Minister's broad base of popular support.

Previously, party rules limited a party president to two two-year terms. Nakasone thus would have had to step down at the end of next month.

Aussie cave art sparks controversy

SYDNEY, Australia (AP). – An expert on ancient cave art claimed to have found an aboriginal rock carving of a rhinoceros-sized animal which is at least 10,000 years old, the Brisbane Sun reported Wednesday.

The expert, Percy Trezise, said the well-preserved artwork was of a diprotodon, the world's largest-known prehistoric marsupial or pouch-bearing animal, which has been extinct at least 6,000 years.

Australian academics were sceptical of the claim that the drawing is that old or that it depicts an extinct Australian animal. But they said if Trezise was proved right, it was a stunning find.

Fifth Palestinian held in Pakistani hijack

ISLAMABAD – Pakistani police have arrested a man believed to have been the mastermind of a gang which hijacked a Pan Am jet at Karachi airport last Friday leaving 21 dead, press reports said Thursday.

The Nawa-i-Waqt daily said an Arab, Sulman Taraki, was arrested Wednesday after flying here from Karachi. It said he was the mastermind behind the four Arab gunmen who killed 21 people and wounded more than 100, before being arrested in a commando action last Friday. The gunmen are currently held by Pakistan authorities.

The government identified the four men who seized the Pan Am plane last Friday in Karachi as Palestinians. The four accused are being held under tight security at a Karachi army base.

Taraki told police he was an unemployed Palestinian refugee, the sources said, adding that he flew between Islamabad, the capital city in the north of the country, and the Arabian Sea port of Karachi seven times in the 10 days before the hijack.

The Pakistani Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) is interrogating the four, helped by U.S. anti-terrorist experts, according to police sources.

Taraki was arrested at the bottom of the airplane stairs. A companion slipped away before he could be detained. The unidentified second man had been followed to the diplomatic office of the PLO, he said.

Police were unable to enter the building because it was a diplomatic mission, Mirza said.

Manhunt widens in Turkey

ISTANBUL. – Thousands of Turkish police stepped up their search Thursday for accomplices of the two terrorists who last Saturday murdered 21 worshippers in Istanbul's Neveh Shalom synagogue.

Roadblocks were in place on roads leading to airports and out of main cities, cars were searched and strict identity checks were being carried out.

On Tuesday, Turkish police issued identikit pictures of the "Arab looking" presumed attackers and also sent their fingerprints to other European police forces.

But a police spokesman admitted at the same time that "the inquiry is not making headway."

A prosecutor investigating the massacre said yesterday the two Arab attackers who died during the raid had not yet been identified.

A police official refused to confirm or deny a report in the mass-circulation daily Hurriyet that the two gunmen stayed for a week in an apartment in central Istanbul with three other Arabs.

Milliyet newspaper said a bullet was found in the body of one of the attackers during an autopsy. It said police were surprised at the discovery and quoted officials as saying one possiblity was that one attacker shot the other before he himself died. Another possibility was that the bullet was a ricochet from one of the weapons used by the attackers.

South Korean students riot to protest Asian Games

SEOUL, South Korea (AP). – Violent demonstrations flared Wednesday at 12 universities across South Korea, with protesters criticizing the Seoul Asian Games and the Korean and U.S. governments.

In Seoul, witnesses said, riot police fired tear gas at three universities, including Sogang and Dongkuk, where hundreds of students demonstrated for several hours and hurled stones and fire bombs. The Yonhap news agency reported violent demonstrations at nine provincial universities, but did not elaborate.

Student demonstrators have denounced the Asian Games, scheduled for September 20 through October 5, as a show being staged at the expense of the poor to draw attention away from annoying domestic issues. Government authorities counter that the vast majority of the Korean people support the games.

There also were shouts of "down with pro-American dictatorship and American economic pressure that ruins the national economy," the witnesses said. Students and other dissidents have accused Washington of supporting a "dictatorial regime" here.

There was no immediate count of injuries, nor were there reports of arrests.

On Wednesday, authorities disclosed plans to suspend classes at universities designated as competition or training sites during the Asiad, following repeated demonstrations that added to fears that dissident students might attempt sabotage aimed at the games.

Near most universities and colleges in Seoul, riot police and vehicles have taken permanent positions, and street patrols have been tightened.

100 bodies recovered in Nigerian boat crash

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP). – Police said Wednesday that about 100 bodies had been recovered off Port Harcourt three days after two vessels collided while apparently trying to avoid an abandoned offshore oil rig platform.

The Nembe and the Assei collided Sunday as they tried to navigate around a dangerous zone off the Niger River delta.

Port Harcourt is a major city in Rivers state, about 480 kilometres southeast of Lagos.

KNESSET GALLERY VIEW

By Dvora Getzler

Mostly rhetoric — even hollower rhetoric

Yossi Sarid's urgent motion for the agenda on the Shin Bet (General Security Service) attorneys was off the agenda – after it had fallen victim to Labour pressure. But there were still three other motions for the agenda – and so the Knesset convened yesterday morning for a second extraordinary session in the summer recess.

Attendance was thin, though the public gallery was doing brisk business. Members who had had their names down to speak were called in vain. It was mostly rhetoric, and even the rhetoric was more hollow than usual.

Except for Deputy Foreign Minister Ronnie Milo. Milo chose not to follow the moderate line of his minister. Yitzhak Shamir, who was restraint itself in answering Gershon Shafat (Tehiya) on the Istanbul synagogue massacre.

Milo, responding later to Tehiya's Eliezer Waldman, who was concerned about the latest Russian-Israeli contacts, could not resist doing what Shamir had counselled against: making political capital out of Jewish tragedy and pain.

The deputy minister assured the House that when Israel made its point and kept its spine proudly straight, as it had done at Helsinki, then its point was always taken.

Crawling, he continued, might well achieve a summit meeting, but only jealously guarded national pride would ensure that the meeting would produce any important political results.

And, lest his point be missed by the mostly empty press gallery, the Likud was at pains to distribute the statement in a hand-out (Shamir's remarks were not so treated).

Shamir carefully refused to buy into Shafat's approach, which contained at least an echo of Industry Minister Ariel Sharon's remarks earlier in the week. The foreign minister, whose presence in the chamber sparked the only flurry of media interest, said little except to reiterate that calls for an international stand on terror would be empty unless supported by firm action against the countries that sponsored Palestinian terrorism, and unless PLO offices around the world were closed.

Mapam's Eliezer Granot was less restrained. Taking up Shafat's echo of Sharon's remarks, Granot reminded the House that Sharon had, he said, used the attempt on the life of Ambassador Shlomo Argov to start the Lebanon War in 1982. Granot criticized Peres's acceptance of Sharon's apology; Sharon's statement, he said, had been totally unforgivable.

Shafat's, Waldman's and Chaika Grossman's motions for the agenda (the latter on the projected building of a Capuchin monastery at the site of the Sobibor death camp in Poland) were all referred to committee, as was Tewfik Toubi's motion on the plight of the Arab school system.

But there was some substance provided by the first reading of two sets of amendments to the law on rape and the banking law, both introduced by Transport Minister Haim Corfu, deputizing for Justice Minister Avraham Sharir.

Grossman (Mapam) and Mordechai Virshubski (Shinui) both expressed the gravest concern that among the amendments in the rape law was one that would bar publication of the accused's name until final judgment was handed down – which, it was pointed out, could even mean barring such publication until rulings on appeals.

Was this, Virshubski wondered, a way of slipping in a muzzling of the press?

The Shinui member also said that, apropos references to sodomy in the amendment, it was high time to strike off the statute book the laws against homosexual relations between consenting adults.

Not unexpectedly, Avraham Verdiger (Morasha) and Menahem Porush (Agudat Yisrael), used the discussion to fulminate against declining moral standards, which both attributed to secular education and the country's departure from Orthodox Jewish norms.

The amendment in the bank law gave Mapam's Yair Tzaban the opportunity to attack what he termed the banks' excessive influence over the economy. But most of all, he wanted to know, what was the government's timetable on the full implementation of the Bejski commission's report on the banks.

As long as those recommendations were flouted, he said, what was the use of the amendments?

British Education Minister Christopher Patten (right) shares a light moment yesterday with his Israeli counterpart, Yitzhak Navon.

Travel brings minister strange career shifts

By BERNARD JOSEPHS
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The travels of Britain's Education Minister Christopher Patten seem to have a strange effect on Downing Street.

Last August, he went on holiday to France while serving as junior minister for Northern Ireland, and returned to find he had been shifted to the Education Ministry.

Now in Israel, Patten's absence has once again coincided with convulsions in Westminster, and on returning to London, he will take up the post of minister for overseas development.

"It is an extraordinary way to develop a career," admitted Patten yesterday as he lunched at the Hebrew University. "But at least this time I had some prior warning. Last time the prime minister was unable to contact me and I had no idea what had happened until I got home."

Patten's shift of ministry was part of Prime Minister Thatcher's reshuffle of middle-rank ministers announced yesterday.

"The prime minister phoned me just before I was about to leave Heathrow on Wednesday evening and told me what was happening. But she also said I should go on with this trip," he said.

The minister is in Israel to visit schools run by the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training (ORT), which earned Thatcher's admiration during her visit here in May.

ORT is well known in Britain, where Employment Secretary Lord Young is a former president of its local organization.

Said Patten: "Despite the government reshuffle, Mrs. Thatcher was extremely keen that I continue on my way here. And I shall be giving a full report on what I have seen to our Secretary of State for Education Kenneth Baker."

Britain, he said, is trying to bridge the gap between academic and technical studies.

Gone are the days when it is assumed that bright school pupils will study classics rather than science, he continued. There has to be much more pressure on schools to provide young people with the kind of qualifications they need to succeed in the job market.

"Technical education in Britain already owes a great deal to ORT, and I am keen to learn about the way it organizes its curriculum, and manages to keep teachers from leaving for jobs in industry," he said.

Four-footed citizens and the four-letter word

Tel Aviv Tel Aviv

Robert Rosenberg

But it's quite certain that everybody who has ever encountered the essence of this story has used that exact word.

Rape, which is a four letter word, is part of this story.

But this story has absolutely nothing to do with sex, and the only violence in it is that which one would like to do to the owners of the dogs who deposit on the sidewalks the stuff that is also the expletive one uses when one steps in it. The fact is that dogdirt is dogdirt and there's no way to avoid it when you walk down almost any street in Tel Aviv.

The rape connection arises because, according to several pet-shop managers, more than half the people buying dogs nowadays are single women living alone in the city.

Though few of them will ever put their dogs through the kind of killer training that provides effective defence against a rapist crawling up a drainpipe at 4 a.m., there is something reassuring about a huge dog – which starts, of course, as a cute puppy – asleep at the front door.

Status also has something to do with it. St. Bernards and Afghans – dogs more appropriate in Siberia than in Tel Aviv in mid-summer – hang around listlessly in Kikar Hamedina, which is also where you can buy a pair of shoes for $500, and paté, presumably to feed the dogs, at $25 an ounce.

In Hatikva, Doberman pinschers and German shepherds seem to be the most popular breeds, along with hungry, mangy mutts that sit on the edge of the restaurant district, scaring away the cats, which are another story altogether.

In Ramat Aviv, beagles, shepherds and retrievers are popular. Along the older boulevards of Tel Aviv there are quite a few little old ladies walking dachshunds.

D'vora Ben Shaul perhaps should do a story on the way certain kinds of dogs end up with certain kinds of people.

There are 6,000 dogs in Tel Aviv registered with the city veterinarian.

Most of those dogs are obviously not pedigree or even almost purebred. Most are mutts. Indeed, most of the dogs in the country are mutts, which is appropriate for a country where the solution to the ethnic gap is intermarriage between Sephardim and Ashkenazim.

Dog owners, like drivers, always blame the other guy. "It wasn't my dog," says the lady with the poodle who just piddled a puddle.

And like a driver explaining speeding to a traffic cop, dog owners are convinced that their dogs are very safe. "My dog is well-behaved," says the tenant downstairs whose German shepherd has never let the aging couple upstairs pass without a vicious cross-examination. True, the dog has never bitten anybody. But how often has Magen David come by with a cardiac unit?

"Isn't he cute?" says the young woman with the untrained mutt that leaps feet first onto every person who comes into the house. It isn't a leap to defend the young woman. It's the leap of an untrained dog who can only be calmed with a jab to the jaw. He's probably the kind of watchdog who watches burglars and rapists come in and out.

According to the city vet, he gets between six to 10 dog bite complaints a week. That's not such a bad statistic for the city, considering that there are some 45,000 complaints a year throughout the country, and every year some 1,000 people are treated for rabies.

So dog bites are definitely more problematic than dog droppings.

But who can you complain to about the deposit on the sidewalk?

City Hall says it has a special team that goes out every day specifically to clean up the stuff the dogs leave behind.

Shopowners are required to sweep the sidewalk in front of their stores. City ordinances demand that dog owners clean up after their dogs, and big fines are posted for dog owners who don't. But City Hall didn't know when somebody was last fined for letting their dog do in the street.

The traffic is probably already too problematic to require that the dogs do it in the gutters, which are cleaned daily by streetsweepers.

There are only two inspectors in the vet's loose dog brigade, and they have to catch the perpetrator in the act – if the perpetrator is connected to a leash. If the dog is running free, they're free to grab it. The staff locks up about 200 stray, lost or unleashed dogs a month.

One of the problems is that dogs don't do it where other dogs have done it, so anybody who wants to try to make the dogs do it only in the little bits of available earth around the trees growing on the city sidewalks is going to run into nature as an opponent to any policy plan that involves fertilizing the city's trees.

City Hall spokesman Benny Cohen promises a big cleanup soon, both for the holidays and because "the summer's coming to an end and the city has hosted many thousands of visitors and it's a mess out there."

In Jerusalem, the city puts out poison to get the stray dogs off the streets.

Mayor Shlomo Lahat heard that in the city council meeting the other day and beamed with pride that Tel Aviv doesn't do such a thing. In Jerusalem they have a bigger rabies problem because of the proximity of the desert and the farms in the hills west of the city.

But Lahat can't promise that his inspectors can enforce an end to the dogdirt problem. What are they gonna do? Hang out on the corner checking out the mutts?

In New York they dealt with the problem by requiring dogowners to use poopscoops, which owners carry around when they take their dogs out for a walk. It's not too clear how well that worked, but there haven't been any Times editorials on the subject in a while.

Go require poopscoops in Tel Aviv. The next thing you know they'll demand that you stop dripping tehina out of your felafel as you walk down Dizengoff on Saturday night.

Maybe the only solution is to catch the rapists.

Druse count cost of rocket attack

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HURFEISH. – Residents of this Druse border village are still counting the cost of Tuesday night's Katyusha rocket attack.

Sixteen houses and three cars were damaged by the explosions and shrapnel, local council chairman Yusuf Her e-Din told Health Minister Gur yesterday. Final estimates of the costs have not yet been made.

Gur visited the village following complaints about the level of medical services in the region and Hurfeish in particular.

Her e-Din asked for an ambulance to be permanently stationed in the village. At present the nearest station is several kilometres away in Ma'alot.

The chairman noted that although nobody had been injured in the attack, more than a dozen people, mainly women and children, suffered from shock.

The Druse leader stressed there was only one community bomb shelter for the village's 3,500 inhabitants.

Gur promised to supply the village with more medical equipment.

Hurfeish was recently designated a "confrontation line" settlement, entitling it to special aid for security and development projects. It is the only non-Jewish settlement in the region to receive this status.

The villagers welcomed the move which they said gave them parity with their Jewish neighbours.

Many residents of this hilltop village serve in the IDF.

One resident, a senior officer in the reserves, speculated yesterday that terrorists may have chosen Hurfeish as a target because they were aware that many villagers serve in the IDF.

The man, who asked not to be named, stressed that the residents trust the IDF implicitly and lauded the army's efforts to ensure the security of the region.

Satmar and Kozlov hassidim marry in Brooklyn street

NEW YORK (AP). – Thousands of people stood shoulder to shoulder on Brooklyn streets on Wednesday to see the children of two hassidic dynasties marry in one of the largest ceremonies of its kind.

Yosef Meisels, 18, married Sarah Esther Rokaech, 18, in a ceremony followed by a celebration that lasted until dawn. He is one of about 35 grandchildren of Rebbe Moshe Teitelbaum of the Satmar hassidim, which has about 150,000 members worldwide.

The Satmar sect was founded in Eastern Europe 300 years ago. The American branch was started in 1945 by Rebbe Joel Teitelbaum, the uncle of the present rebbe.

The couple met seven months ago after the wedding was arranged by their parents. She is the daughter of Rabbi Meyer Rokaech, the Kozlov rebbe.

His Brooklyn congregation has about 1,000 members, Rabbi Hertz Frankel said.

Frankel had estimated that 30,000 hassidim would attend, but police could not confirm that figure.

The service was conducted under a canopy by Rebbe Teitelbaum and other family members. Lights were strung from pole to pole overhead.

After the ceremony, buses took the guests to a gymnasium at a nearby school for celebrations.

Jail term for Kach activist

Kach Party activist Craig Leitner, convicted of a series of attacks against Arabs, was sentenced in the Jerusalem District Court yesterday to 30 months' imprisonment.

Leitner was found guilty of taking part in a 1983 shooting attack in Ramallah by Kach members against an Arab bus in which six Arab workers were wounded. He was also convicted of setting fire to Arab-owned cars in Hebron and East Jerusalem, and of throwing petrol bombs at the Al-Fajr editorial offices in East Jerusalem and at a home in the Shuafat refugee camp in northern Jerusalem.

Leitner, 24, returned here lat month from the U.S., where he fled in 1984, just before he was to testify as state's witness in the trial of his accomplices.

Leitner's sentence followed a plea-bargain in which he pleaded guilty to all the charges against him, and in which he returned voluntarily from the U.S., without the need for extradition proceedings. The sentence is to be reduced by 13 months – the time he spent in prison before his flight to the U.S. (Itim).

Kreisky may launch new daily

By ILONA HENRY
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

VIENNA. – Former Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and one of his friends, industrialist Karl Kahane are considering publishing a new daily in Vienna.

They reportedly feel that the concentration of the press in conservative hands, especially visible over the past months in connection with the Waldheim affair, where mass publications like Kronenzeitung, carried the pro-Waldheim campaign into the country, should be counteracted by a liberal daily that would bring some pepper into the Austrian media scene.

Apart from the Socialist Party organ, Arbeiter Zeitung, which is read by 40,000 people, the daily Kurier, the weeklies Profil, and Wochenpresse are all owned by the same concern and represent industrial interests.

Kreisky, nick-named "Journalistenkanzler" because of his friendly relations with the press, feels that Austria could use a publication like the West German weekly, Die Zeit.

Although he claims that he is too old for this project, he has spoken to several top journalists to get ideas on this possible venture.

For Karl Kahane, the investment would not mean too much, he has just recently revived the Austrian bourse.

Group to lobby MKs to block extradition

A committee to block William Nakash's extradition to France to stand trial for murder has started work in Jerusalem. It plans to enlist the support of Knesset members and other public figures and to gather signatures for a petition against the extradition.

Nakash argued before the Supreme Court that the killing of an Algerian in Bensançon with which he is charged, was politically motivated. He said it had been intended to stop Arabs from harassing local Jews.

The Supreme Court on Tuesday turned down his appeal against the Jerusalem District Court's decision to extradite him.

Tussle over handicapped children

By DAVID RUDGE

CARMIEL. – Thirty-one handicapped and retarded children here are at the centre of a war of words between two local authorities and the Education Ministry, focusing on who should pay the childrens' tuition fees at the Regavim special school over 30 kilometres away in Kiryat Haim.

On the first day of the new term they arrived at the school, only to be sent home again. For the Haifa municipality said it would not accept them until Carmiel had paid tuition fees of IS 40,000 for the previous two years.

Carmiel countered that the Education Ministry had guaranteed to pay the debts and cover this year's fees.

The children went back to school next day, when the Education Ministry set up a committee to solve the dispute.

This has given children and parents a reprieve, but the row is by no means over.

The Haifa municipality insists that if the debts and fees for this year are not paid by next Monday, the children will again find themselves locked out of school. The Carmiel local council has neglected its responsibilities to the children and ignored repeated warnings, a municipality spokesman has charged.

Carmiel, for its part, has accused the Haifa municipality of being obstinate and insensitive, and has threatened to retaliate by sending home 25 Haifa youngsters at a Carmiel boarding school.

Scholarship for deaf at Tel Aviv U.

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. – The first scholarship in Israel tailored to the needs of deaf students has been donated to Tel Aviv University by Heather Sarkin of California.

The scholarship for undergraduate studies will be awarded for the first time next year. It covers tuition and special services such as a sign-language interpreter, notetaker and tutors. In the absence of a candidate the money will be used for research or for training professionals in work with the deaf.

Sarkin, originally from South Africa, is a telecommunications consultant for the deaf in the San Diego area. Several years ago she introduced telecommunications devices for the deaf (TDDs) to Israel. These devices enable hearing-impaired persons to communicate by phone using a small typewriter keyboard.

When her parents died recently, she used the proceeds from the sale of their home to establish the scholarship.

The scholarship recipient will be required to devote two years working in the deaf community, in voluntary service during or after university or as a professional after graduation. "He or she can be an important role model for youngsters," Sarkin said here recently.

"I know from our experience in the U.S. that no field need be closed because of a hearing problem. The only limitations on deaf people are those they put on themselves."

Jurists up in arms

The decision to allow the Shin Bet lawyers involved in the 1984 bus hijack cover-up to continue in the service has outraged government legal experts. Menachem Shalev reports.

State Attorney Yona Blatman.... Victim of a frame-up.

Deputy State Attorney ... "Insisted on investigation."

(Rahamim Israeli)

SHABAK is the Hebrew acronym for Sherut Bitahon Klali, the General Security Service. Behind closed doors, in recent trials initiated by the GSS, the acronym has provided judges with a handy witticism: leshabek, they quip, when what they mean is leshaker, to lie.

They say it went more or less like this:

Bowing to pressure from the Shin Bet, then defence minister Moshe Arens appointed a GSS executive to serve as the deputy chairman of the Zorea commission investigating the killing on April 12, 1984, of two terrorists who had hijacked the No. 300 Tel Aviv-Ashkelon bus.

At night, the executive would recount the day's proceedings of the commission to two GSS attorneys, both popular and respected members of their profession. Together, the three mustered all their professional acumen to make sure that the fabricated evidence to be given by GSS operatives next day was airtight unbreakable. The two lawyers, experts in their field, knew how to tie up all the loose legal ends in order to achieve a favourable result.

The Zorea Commission presented its findings on May 28, 1984. A commission headed by State Attorney Yona Blatman was then appointed and sat for over a year and a half. Its verdict was a professional masterpiece: Brigadier Itzik Mordechai was the one who had killed the two terrorists.

It was a beautiful frame-up, ingeniously created and meticulously executed by the Shin Bet executive and his two legal helpers. Even an internal disciplinary court of the Shin Bet was fooled.

The executive has since been rewarded for his endeavours and has been elevated to highert ranks of the GSS command. The two attorneys are still at their jobs. Almost a year has passed since the then deputy head of the GSS, Reuven Hazak, informed Prime Minister Shimon Peres of the cover-up.

But the sulking procecutors and lawyers at the State Attorney's Office do not understand the rules of the game. They won't have anything to do with the GSS legal department, which craftily deceived their boss, Yona Blatman.

A kind of judicial elite

State and district attorneys, as well as their companions at the Justice Ministry and the Attorney-General's Office, have long been regarded as gems even by top-flight civil servants in other ministries. The State Attorney's Office has traditionally succeeded in attracting some of the finest legal minds the country has to offer. They have a special esprit de corps, and some even consider themselves a kind of judicial elite.

"I came here because I knew that I would be dealing with the most fascinating and complex legal problems," says one young attorney who, as many of them do these days, preferred to remain anonymous. "I came because I had naive ideals. I thought I would be able to fix some things in government, even if it was only a few small things. I would never defend the state before the High Court of Justice if I could not, with a good conscience, believe in the case.

"But now, after the recent events, I just don't know any longer. All those who want to coerce us into working with the GSS lawyers must think we are nothing but mercenaries. Well, as a mercenary I might as well make some real money."

Three top-rank lawyers of the Justice Ministry have recently decided to do just that. Renato Yarak, formerly in charge of High Court matters in the State Attorney's Office together with two senior colleagues – Daniella Gorny and Haim Liran – will soon be opening their own private law office.

THE JUDGMENTS in criminal trials are frequently studded with lavish praise for the arguments of state attorneys, who often have to vie with the best legal minds that money can buy. The more lawyers who leave government service, the more criminals will be out roaming the streets.

The give-and-take between judges and prosecutors in GSS-sponsored trials is often based on trust. Details of the work of Shin Bet field operatives cannot always be revealed even to a judge sitting behind closed doors. Thus, when a prosecutor says, "This is so," the judge must take him at his word. The GSS legal department is the link between the field and the State and District Attorney's Offices. These days, it is difficult for prosecutors to look judges in the eye and say, "This is so."

'Violated basics of the profession'

TIME WAS when lawyers were called "officers of the court." They were seen as constituting part of the court machinery aimed at getting justice done. The term is no longer used, but state and district attorneys like to believe that it is still valid.

"By lying to a judicial tribunal, the two attorneys violated the very basics of their profession," says a former government lawyer. Emeritus Professor Shneor Zalman Feller, an eminent jurist and one of the signatories of the petition sent to Prime Minister Peres this week, asked, "If a brilliant surgeon used a scalpel to murder someone, would we let him continue to operate?"

A lawyer's loyalty to judicial panels, say many in the profession, should at the very least equal that of a doctor to his Hippocratic oath.

The practice at the State's Attorney's Office is that if a lawyer strenuously objects to presenting a case, one does not "rape his conscience," as they put it at the Justice Ministry. The objecting lawyer is relieved of his brief and a different one appointed. In the case of the GSS, says one state attorney, those condemning the boycott of the Shin Bet lawyers are "advocating a gang rape."

In March or April of this year, the then attorney-general Yitzhak Zamir summoned the two GSS attorneys to his office to question them about the rapidly unfolding cover-up affair.

The attorney-general is considered to be the professional supervisor of all the government legal advisers: for government counsel, his word is law. The two GSS lawyers failed to show up for the meeting, an unprecedented act. Shortly thereafter, Zamir gave the order to stop working with the Shin Bet legal department as long as the two self-confessed attorneys remain in office.

MK MICHAEL EITAN (Likud), a lawyer and a member of the Knesset Law Committee, believes that Zamir, most of the state attorneys and the 25 protesting legal academics are conducting a political vendetta.

"The State Attorney's Office is fighting a dovish political fight against the Shin Bet," he says. "They are taking the law into their own hands and are contravening the instructions of the takshir [government regulations.] The State Attorney's Office is not their own private business, and they are setting a bad example to other public sector workers."

ON MONDAY, almost half a year after Zamir's order, Prime Minister Peres decided that despite the uproar developing in most of the country's legal community – or, as some would have it, precisely because of it – the two attorneys would continue in office. Among other considerations, Peres was also mindful of the cabinet-approved pledge made to the two by attorney Ram Caspi, on the night the pardons were granted. He promised them that no further action would be taken against them.

"Many promises made on that night were broken" says a source close to the events." The attorneys as well as President Herzog, were promised that there would be no investigation".

Dr. Mordechai Kremnitzer, another of the Hebrew University petitioners, does not hold the promise to the attorneys in high regard either. "If they are so worthy," he asks, "why don't they just go ahead and appoint them to the Supreme Court?"

Kremnitzer says that the decision to keep the two at their posts "breaks all records of public callousness and contravenes the most basic concepts of the rule of law."

THE DAILY newspaper Al Hamishmar added an interesting footnote to Monday's meeting at the Prime Minister's Office. Peres and Attorney-General Yosef Harish, it reported, had discussed the need to "neutralize" Dorit Beinisch, a deputy state attorney. Beinisch and two of her colleagues, Yehudit Karp and Yehudit Zur were said to be the main proponents of Zamir's insistence on investigating the GSS cover-up.

There are more women among Justice Ministry lawyers than in any other professional government service. And they occupy more top positions than in any other government office. Many of them, as well as MK Shulamit Aloni (Citizens Rights Movement), believe that this "aberration" is an important – if latent – reason for the hostility to the government lawyers.

Campaign of mud-slinging

The three crusading attorneys were reportedly labelled "Amazons" at a cabinet meeting held earlier this year, and they were at one time the objects of a particularly distasteful mud-slinging campaign conducted by MK Haim Drukman (Matzad).

MK EITAN is not really sure whether the two attorneys committed any crimes. He says they were told that the pardons were needed in order to prevent an investigation of the affair. Reasons of state security were cited, and the two did their patriotic duty. "Maybe they would have been acquitted in court", he says.

Other lawyers and politicians, however, are perplexed by Peres's insistence on defending the two. But Aloni is not surprised. "Peres is totally insensitive to matters of law and justice," she says. "If he had any inhibitions deriving from a respect for the rule of law, he would have long ago understood, 'This is it – no more.'"

Her party colleague, MK Yossi Sarid, who had the rug pulled out from under his initiative to hold a Knesset debate on the matter yesterday when Labour Party MKs withdrew their endorsement of the debate, has raised a more sinister possibility. "It's so incomprehensible," he says, "that it leads one to think that someone is obligated to the two, that someone is afraid."

Still, most people believe that the two will be eased out of their posts in the near future. The cooperation between the State Attorney's Office and the GSS will then be revived. The scar, and the lasting effects, on many government prosecutors is another matter altogether.

The good fight: war against terror

Europeans urged to tighten security at synagogues over High Holydays

Mark Segal / Post Political Correspondent

THE EVIL spectre of Arab gunmen stalking Jewish houses of worship across Europe during the coming High Holydays hovered palpably in the air during my conversation with Tamar Porat, the specialist on Palestinian terrorism at the Tel Aviv University's Jaffee Centre for Strategic Studies.

Porat has concluded that members of the Abu Nidal gang perpetrated both the Istanbul synagogue bloodbath and the Pan Am hijack at Karachi airport. Although she has devoted the past four years to studying Palestinian terrorism, any illusion about her being inured to its excesses was swept away by the massacre of innocent Jews at Sabbath prayer. And in view of the patterns of Abu Nidal's operations – which always come in clusters – Porat fears that he may have similar atrocities against synagogues in Europe planned for Rosh Hashana, Yom Kippur or Succot. She would advise those in positions of responsi*bility to heighten their security* arrangements at all places of Jewish worship.

Porat says the Abu Nidal terror group has felt most at ease in two European capitals, Rome and (especially) Athens, benefiting from the sympathetic attitudes to the Palestinians of the Craxi and especially the Papandreou governments. The Greeks invariably let all Arab terrorists go; for example, when one of Abu Nidal's gunmen who perpetrated the atrocity at Rome's Great Synagogue at Succot 1982 was caught trying to smuggle in explosives, they let him go. Porat concurs that Athens could be termed the European capital of Arab terrorism.

Abu Nidal always uses Soviet bloc weapons. For example, in Istanbul, the terror ring was known to have used Polish-made sub-machineguns of the WZ63 type. Abu Nidal has switched between various paymasters over the years after a long alliance with Iraq to Syria and more recently to Libya. One source mentioned the arch-terrorist receiving an amount in the region of $12 million from Muammar Gaddafi's people to seal their pact.

Porat sees trails leading from the latest blood-spilling, with the well-planned organization and excessive cruelty that are Abu Nidal's trademarks, to the Libyans and the Syrians. The division of this evil labour is between Libyan financing and Syrian provision of facilities, such as training camps in the Bek'a Valley. However, the TAU expert is sceptical of any Iranian involvement. It's difficult to believe, she says, that such a religious regime as that ruling Teheran would sanction an attack on worshippers in a house of prayer. Such scruples would not hold sway in either Tripoli or Damascus, she remarks.

NOTWITHSTANDING the known Soviet sponsorship of Arab terrorist activities, Porat says there is no clear proof of any Soviet tie-up with Abu Nidal. He is not known to have visited the Soviet Union nor have his men enjoyed the kind of training facilities there at the disposal of the PLO mainstream organizations The arch-terrorist has surfaced on many occasions in Sofia, but there is no evidence of any overt Bulgarian involvement in his terrorist activity.

Abu Nidal has cultivated the ominous image of a man of mystery, keeping his whereabouts unknown. However, he is thought at present to commute between Tripoli and Damascus. It is even unclear where his wife and four children actually live. Porat says the arch-terrorist makes sure that even less is known of his lieutenants, who remain shadowy figures.

Only in recent years has Abu Nidal granted a few newspaper inter*views. What is known about him is* that his real name is Sabri al-Bana and he was born, it is believed, 45 years ago in Jaffa into a family of wealthy landowners. In 1948 the family fled to Nablus, where his merchant brother still resides. He is known to have joined the Fatah in 1970, serving as its representative, first in Sudan and then in Iraq. In 1973 he broke with the Fatah, denouncing Yasser Arafat's "pragmatism."

Abu Nidal has no pretensions to any Marxist ideology, and has carved out his own niche by proving himself to be the deadliest of them all, training his operatives to commit the cruellest and bloodiest of all the atrocities perpetrated by Palestinian terror gangs.

THE NAME he assumed, "Abu Nidal" – "Father of the Struggle" – characterizes the man. Porat reports that in one rare interview the arch-terrorist boasted he had 300 cousins, and that he would sacrifice them all if they betrayed the cause. He was good as his word, Porat relates, for Nidal confirmed having ordered the murder of one of his cousins, Sa'id Hamami, who was the PLO representative in London, for being "a reactionary."

To judge by the number of times Abu Nidal's men have perpetrated acts of terror in Turkey and Pakistan, they possess local well-organized infrastructures in both countries. She finds the proximity of the incidents in Karachi and Istanbul is not coincidental. With Abu Nidal, atrocities come in clusters like the attacks in Vienna and Rome airports, and the previous sequence of attacks in Athens, Rome and Nicosia. Their modus operandi was always the same: a well-planned operation and excessive cruelty by blood-thirsty operatives. This was seen in Karachi airport, as with the Egyptian plane they hijacked to Malta.

That they mentioned their aim of flying to Cyprus to release Arafat's killers of Israeli yachtsmen in Larnaca was in keeping with past practices of trying to embroil Arafat in their blood-letting, Porat contends. Porat certainly did not rule out a clear connection between the Peres-Mubarak summit and renewed Middle East diplomatic momentum and Abu Nidal's design of discrediting Arafat through such a terrorist ploy. The expert acknowledges that one theory in circulation is that the Karachi attack also involved members of a splinter of Arafat's erstwhile faithful followers who have despaired of his strategy and felt, after a year of their pals languishing in a Cypriot jail, the need to do something to get them out. However, she does not think that theory holds much water, if only because of the complexity of such a well-organized hijacking. Such a splinter group could hardly mount that kind of operation.

RETURNING to the theme of Abu Nidal as "mystery man," Porat recalls the sequence of reports in November 1984 about his death in Baghdad, which ended when he surfaced in January 1985 in the Bek'a Valley. He is supposed to be an ailing man, and to have undergone open-heart surgery in London in 1980. More recently Abu Nidal boasted to a West German paper about having undergone surgery in the U.S. under an assumed identity, thanks to a forged Saudi Arabian passport.

The Jaffee Centre scholar notes that in Abu Nidal's bloodstained career he has killed more Arabs, particularly Palestinians, than Jews. Indeed it is only since he moved into Gaddafi's orbit that his gunmen have concentrated more on murdering Jews.

His first, best-known act of terror was in September 1973, when he occupied the Saudi Embassy in Paris. He was then a mercenary of the Iraqi and Syrian intelligence agencies, switching his death-dealing loyalties seasonally from one Ba'athist regime to the other. As far as Jewish targets are concerned, his better-known atrocities include attacks on Jewish schoolchildren in Antwerp (1980); the Vienna synagogue (1981); in 1982 on a Jewish restaurant in Paris; on Rosh Hashana, the synagogue in Brussels; and at Succot the Great Synagogue of Rome. And now Istanbul, each incident bloodier than the one before.

Porat can only conclude from the evidence gathered so far that the two terrorists used in Istanbul were pro*vided with tampered grenades that* would kill them afterwards. Shi'ites and Lebanese have knowingly committed suicide attacks, but never Palestinians. Porat finds in this an ominous new trend of making sure that all connections with the operating agency will be automatically eliminated. She sees a clear connection between this new operational approach and fears arising in the wake of U.S. retaliation against Libya for previous acts of terror. Nor does she rule out that help was extended to Abu Nidal's men by some extremist Shi'ite factions.

ABU NIDAL is thought to have about 800 men at his disposal, organized on the classic cell principle, so that members of one cell know next to nothing of the others. He often recruits Palestinians by means of financing students' studies in European universities, in some cases as "sleepers," summoned to action when the occasion arises. Thus in May 1981, the head of the gang that murdered Heinz Nittel, head of the Austria-Israel Friendship Society, was Bahij Younism, who had been studying and living in Vienna for a number of years. The same applied to members of the hit team that attacked Israel's former ambassador to London, Shlomo Argov, in 1982, when dormant agents joined forces under the command of a colonel in Iraqi military intelligence named Naif Ros'an.

Porat speaks also of a growing tendency by Abu Nidal and other Palestinian terror groups of employing new recruits for terror outrages, as they are highly disposable agents, in whom little has been invested.

Among some bloody milestones in Abu Nidal's career of terror are: the murder in Cyprus of President Sadat's good friend, Yusuf Siba'i in 1978; the series of murders (1978-80) of PLO representatives in London, Kuwait and Paris; and in August 1978 the attack on the PLO office in Islamabad. In 1980 another PLO man was killed in Paris. In 1980, in Abu Nidal's first bid to kill a Jew, a Madrid Jewish community leader escaped, but not his non-Jewish neighbour, a victim of mistaken identity.

IN 1974, after an attempt on Arafat's life, Abu Nidal was condemned to death in absentia by the Fatah. In 1976 he began to operate under the title of Black June for Iraq (and against Syria), grabbing hostages in the Hotel Semiramis in Damascus. Then in October and December 1976 there were two unsuccessful bids to assassinate Abdel Halim Khaddam, today Syria's vice-president.

Since then, Porat notes, it is believed that Abu Nidal has "moonlighted" for Rifat Assad, who wanted to eliminate Khaddam from the power struggle. Later, in 1976, came the attack on Syria's embassies in Karachi and Rome. In 1980 he switched from Iraq to Syria, and in September of 1981 attacked the Zim office in Limassol. By March 1982, he had swivelled back to Baghdad, where the attempt on ambassador Shlomo Argov's life was planned.

At the same time Abu Nidal's hitmen continued to disturb the peace of Kuwait and other Gulf states by a series of terror acts, largely carried out for the purpose of extortion, Porat avers. In 1982, Abu Nidal made constant headlines with murderous attacks in New Delhi, Madrid, Bombay, Karachi (again), and Kuwait. Not forgetting the murder of a little boy during the Succot service in Rome's Great Synagogue.

In 1982 came the assassination of PLO moderate Issam Sartawi in Portugal at the Socialist International summit. At the end of 1983, Abu Nidal switched back to Syria's orbit, after the Iraqis threw him out under American pressure. At the end of that year, he began attacking Jordanian targets for his new Syrian paymasters – killing successively, on October 25 and 26, the Jordanian ambassadors to Rome and Delhi.

A SERIES of attacks on British targets began in 1984, as part of a bid to secure the release of terrorists jailed for their role in the attack on Argov. On March 24, two bombs exploded during Queen Elizabeth's state visit to Amman, near the Inter-continental Hotel, which served as a press centre.

On March 28, the British cultural attache in Athens was murdered by Abu Nidal's men using the cover name of "Revolutionary Organiza*tion of Socialist Moslems.*" In May, a British newsman was kidnapped in Beirut; in November, a bomb exploded at the British Airways office in Beirut; and a British diplomat was murdered in Bombay.

ABU NIDAL dons names and doffs them as an expedient – in Cairo he is Egyptian Revolution, in Jordan the Fatah Revolutionary Council, in Kuwait the Arab Revolutionary Brigades. Or he resumes the name of Black September as in the killing of the Jordanian ambassador to Bucharest on December 4, 1984. Not forgetting the murder in Amman of PLO moderate Fahd Kawasmeh.

Since 1985, Abu Nidal under joint Libyan-Syrian sponsorship has selected American targets in Egypt and Berlin. There has been the bid to use his agent's pregnant Irish girlfriend as a bomb carrier on an El Al flight from London.

In 1985 alone Abu Nidal's men perpetrated 33 acts of terror, ten under the cover of Black September.

Porat suggests that the Black September title covers a "terrorist pool," which draws on the forces of Abu Moussa and Ahmed Jibril, particularly as a Syrian tool for frightening any Jordanian move towards peace.

'Smoking gun' could spark U.S. strike

Wolf Blitzer / Post Washington Correspondent

SECRETARY of State George Shultz has been the Reagan Administration's point man in advocating a tough counter-terrorism policy which clearly includes the use of military force. He has the strong backing of President Ronald Reagan.

But others in the administration, including Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger and some of the top military brass, continue to have serious misgivings about that approach.

Led by Shultz, the Reagan Administration moved decisively against Libya last April. Hard evidence of Libyan involvement in the Berlin disco bombing that month resulted in the U.S. air strikes against Libya and its leader, Muammar Gaddafi. There was a "smoking gun." Gaddafi was bruised by the strike, but not removed from the scene.

Now, in the aftermath of the Pan Am hijacking in Karachi and the synagogue attack in Istanbul, the Reagan Administration is once again attempting to determine responsibility and a proper strategy for responding. U.S. experts are searching for more hard evidence of Libyan complicity. They would like to succeed, but the evidence has not yet been found.

Even at this early stage, a debate has erupted within the administration over the future use of military force in going after the terrorists. Some of the Americans want to retaliate hard, along the lines of the April bombing of Libya. Others are more cautious, preferring the non-violent course of tighter economic sanctions and diplomatic isolation. They are worried about negative fallout from the European allies.

Before these recent incidents, America's UN Ambassador, Vernon Walters, was shuttling around Europe, attempting to line up allied support for stronger economic and political actions against Libya. At best, he was having mixed results. Clearly perspectives differ on this subject in the U.S. and Western Europe.

According to U.S. officials, Europe does not have much "stomach" for the use of military force. The Europeans, and even the British, simply fear that it will not be effective.

In fact, they insist that force could prove counterproductive by promoting greater terrorism against the West. That non-violent line of thinking, which led France last April to deny American bombers on their way to Libya the use of its airspace, is simply unacceptable to Shultz and other senior policymakers in the U.S. administration. This was underlined in July when Shultz spoke at a State Department conference on terrorism.

"TERRORISM is something that we don't accept," Shultz said. "We don't accept it as being justified by some so-called cause. And so we seek to put it down...Insofar as terrorism is concerned, and people who are engaged in terrorism, we think they ought to be apprehended and punished in no uncertain terms, and regarded by all civilized governments as outlaws."

More recently, Shultz reiterated that tough line. Addressing an audience at Harvard University on September 5, he defended the air strikes against Libya in April.

Reflecting that hard line in Washington, the commander of American forces in Europe, Gen. Bernard Rogers, told reporters that the U.S., the next time around, could even use long-range B-52 bombers or submarine-based missiles to attack Libya. "He's got to know that he is subject to that kind of treatment," he said, referring to Gaddafi. "I think Gaddafi has to understand that if he involves himself in sensational terrorist acts against U.S. personnel or facilities and his fingerprints are found, he's likely to suffer a similar type of punishment as he did on the 15th of April." Rogers had been in charge of that earlier bombing raid.

Other American experts are calling for tougher commercial sanctions against Libya. They are quite irritated with the Europeans who are still conducting business virtually as usual with Gaddafi's regime.

A former State Department counter-terrorism expert, Frank Perez, said the U.S. ought to "push our allies to take very strong sanctions, for example, prohibiting the flights of Libyan aircraft to Western Europe." But the Europeans are resisting that step without more hard evidence of Libyan involvement in recent terrorist incidents.

The Americans recognize that they have a problem with the European allies, even Britain. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher allowed U.S. jet fighters to take off from British bases last April. But the British may no longer be willing to cooperate in future air strikes.

"This kind of reaction may be endemic now, as the Europeans' political will collapses in the face of new terrorism and the fear of some kind of potential war – if the U.S. gets involved with Libya," said Prof. Michael Vlahos of the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies. "So the U.S. may be on its own."

Officials in Washington concede that it is easier to strike out militarily against Libya than Syria. The latter is much more closely aligned with the Soviet Union. But The Wall Street Journal, in a lead editorial on Tuesday, said the U.S. must respond decisively even if the Syrians are implicated. Under that circumstance, it said, the American public would support "a raid on Damascus."

The editorial, which strongly suggested that the Kremlin leadership was involved behind the scenes in promoting terrorism by proxy against the U.S. and its friends, concluded: "It has become more and more important for the U.S. to show itself capable of considered and effective responses. The retaliation against Libya was the kind of mes*sage that seems best able to* penetrate the shadows where Soviet policy is conducted."

THERE CAN be no doubt that the American public is getting fed up by all of this terrorism and will support harsh military reprisals. This was reflected during a panel discussion the other day on the Cable News Network. A conservative Republican senator and a liberal Democratic representative agreed that the U.S. could not remain passive in the face of this upsurge of terrorism.

Sen. Larry Pressler of South Dakota (Rep.), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that the U.S. was severely hampered in retaliating against splinter Palestinian or Lebanese Shi'ite gangs based in Lebanon. There is an Executive Order prohibiting assassinations, he said. "We can carry out military operations but not assassinations of individuals. And that's something that I think we may have to change." Pressler acknowledged that this "may run against the grain of our country."

Democratic Rep. Robert Torricelli of New Jersey agreed with his proposal. "To some extent, we have to adjust the way we do business if we're going to compete effectively," he said, justifying assassinations "on occasion."

Thus, it seems reasonable to say that the Reagan Administration, if it again uses military force – Israeli-style – in retaliating against the terrorists and their sponsors, the American public will be strongly supportive. The administration will first have to obtain a "smoking gun." The evidence will be presented to Congress and then leaked to the news media. Innocent civilians may be killed in the process of another U.S. air strike, and the European allies will grumble, but Reagan, Shultz and others in Washington, backed by the American public, will be willing to pay that price.

British claim special units foil attacks

David Horovitz/Post London Correspondent

IT IS "highly unlikely" that an attack of the Istanbul synagogue nature could succeed in Britain, according to Inspector Ray Waddington of the Metropolitan Police Crime Prevention section (CPS). He believes that Britain's gun control, intelligence gathering and port security are a strong enough combination to virtually rule out such an attack.

Waddington's attitude is symptomatic of the equanimity with which the British security services seem to regard the threat of terrorism in Britain. The crucial question is whether this equanimity is born of the knowledge that all possible precautions have been taken, or whether it is, rather, a product of complacency. An article in The Times newspaper on Tuesday suggested the latter, charging that Britain is falling down in the fight against terror on both the practical and symbolic levels.

Dealing with terrorism in Britain is, first and foremost, the province of the police, be it the CPS, the Anti-Terror Squad, Special Branch, the Diplomatic Protection Group, or the airport police units.

The specific operating procedures of most of these formations, for obvious reasons, remain largely secret; only the CPS will speak on the record to the press, and then only to give out the sparsest of details.

There are some 80 CPS officers working in London. There is a constant monitoring of world events and consequent highlighting of possible areas of risk. Those at risk are given advice about entering buildings, keeping a look-out for suspicious objects, and so on.

Waddington believes that these kinds of precaution are sufficient, and that there is little likelihood of a direct, suicide-type attack on a synagogue in Britain. He shrugs off the shooting of the Israeli ambassador, Shlomo Argov, in 1982, the attempted El Al plane bombing this April, and the Libyan People's Bureau crisis as isolated incidents which prove only that one cannot totally prevent terrorist acts, not that a different attitude to prevention might be warranted.

He feels, for example, that it is "over the top" for synagogue guards to carry weapons. Gun control is sufficienty strict, he believes, and Britain, is "a very different ball game" from the Middle East.

As far as the other anti-terrorist units are concerned, expert sources suggest that Britain has "well-established plans" for dealing with sieges, hijacks and the other crisis situations thrown up by terrorism. One is given to understand, for example, that had the Karachi hijack occurred at Heathrow, there would have been no possibility whatsoever of the plane taking off again, whether or not the pilot and crew had been on board.

PRIME MINISTER Margaret Thatcher has repeatedly stated that Britain will not negotiate with terrorists in any circumstances, and that there would be no question of releasing hostages under terrorist threats. Diplomatic sources add that Britain has been working hard to persuade other nations to adopt this kind of publicly intransigent policy in the belief that "a hijacker, however fanatical he may be, might give pause for thought if he knows that he is not only risking his life but wasting his time."

Whitehall sources accept that it is easy to talk, and that their problems are in no way comparable to those of, say, Israel; but they seem to have complete faith in the ability of their "exceptionally well-trained forces" to deal with any terror situation.

Anti-terrorism measures rely on intensive coordination and cooperation between the various police units, the armed forces – including, of course, the crack SAS (Special Air Service), and the MI5 and MI6 intelligence-gathering and counter-espionage services. Furthermore, the headquarters of Interpol are in London and Paris; there is a European police network to deal with terrorism; and British anti-terror experts have worked with other Economic Community nations, learning the lessons of previous terrorist incidents, and shaping what are said to be a carefully-rehearsed and fairly rigid series of procedures.

In terms of specific, discernible steps to counter terrorism, Britain is using its six-month term as EC president to push for tighter entry controls at Community ports – a concept that flies in the face of the EC-envisaged Europe without frontiers.

IN THE WAKE of the attempted El Al bombing in April, random security checks, including body searches, were stepped up at airports, so that one in three Heathrow passengers is now likely to be stopped, as compared with the previous one in 10.

All luggage passing through British airports is X-rayed, and electronic sniffers are used on luggage to and from the Middle East and Ireland. The Hindawi bomb, however, somehow escaped detection by even the sophisticated electronic sniffers.

The last few months have also seen something of a crackdown on airport personnel, with more stringent vetting for those allowed to move freely around airports.

It is likely that these kinds of measures will shortly be extended to sea travel. An 80-nation committee is meeting in London this week to finalize steps aimed at preventing a repeat of the Achille Lauro attack last year. Among the measures under consideration is a call for governments to appoint bodies to *co-ordinate national security prog*rammes for their shipping, passenger ports and shipping lines.

Other recommendations include screening to prevent weapons being smuggled on board; secure areas around ships and terminal sections; and special lighting, alarms and security identification systems.

WHITEHALL sources reject the suggestion of complacency, pointing out that Britain has been the toughest of all EC countries in breaking diplomatic ties with Libya, banning all new defence contracts, and restricting the movement of Libyan nationals.

They accept, however, that while security has been tightened, and while ministers have expressed great shock and horror at terrorist actions and have signed numerous declarations, total security is quite simply not possible. Too much ostentatious security, they feel, plays into terrorists' hands while alienating the travelling public.

The focus appears to have shifted slightly, from pure terror prevention – and the kind of straightforward retaliation favoured against the IRA in the early Seventies – toward a prolonged battle against terrorism by means of the non-violent tools of re-education, intelligence gathering and public support.

Whitehall sources confirm a move away from the idea of retaliation, because "essentially it doesn't work." They accept that the early Seventies' policy of hitting back at the IRA might have looked very like the "eye for an eye" policy they now avoid, but explain that the British government had to be seen to be doing something. Nevertheless, they express displeasure over Israel's reprisal activities, believing that these steps only "maintain the spiral of violence."

The British-aided U.S. attacks on Libya in April, these sources assert, were different from Israeli reprisals, in that the targets were "very specific."

It is pointed out that the homes of convicted IRA terrorists "are not bulldozed. The men are tried and jailed through the courts: there are no further reprisals.

Bonn's troubled call for cooperation

Wladimir Struminski/Post Bonn Correspondent

BONN has been busy calling for international cooperation against terrorism since this week's double blood-bath at Karachi and Istanbul. Government spokesman Friedhelm Ost not only strongly condemned the attacks but he also announced that West Germany would raise the issue of the fight against terrorism in all appropriate international forums. Germany and France decided to call for an urgent meeting of the European Community's interior ministers to debate the anti-terror struggle. To Bonn, however, international does not mean just European, or American. At a press conference on Wednesday, Ost claimed that the European-Arab dialogue (between the EC and the Arab League) was also an appropriate international forum to seek cooperation against the scourge of terrorism.

Deputy Foreign Minister Juergen Moellemann also demanded stronger anti-terror cooperation between Europeans and Arabs. Moellemann was speaking, technically, as "an individual politician," rather than on behalf of his ministry, but as a ministry spokesman put it, cooperation with Arab League states against terrorism is an aim the ministry pursues officially.

That is not all. In a reaction to Istanbul, Ost mentioned the special German responsiblity for "the Jews in the whole world," before calling for tougher anti-terror measures. Thus he seemed to be implying that the protection of Jews was an aim of the German anti-terror policy. The foreign ministry, for its part, has made it clear that Germany would not accept any anti-terror cooperation with the Arabs which would exempt anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish attacks.

German-inspired, Euro-Arab protection of Israel and the Jews from Palestinian terrorism sounds like an unlikely idea. To be sure, the West German government will certainly not agree to any specific exclusion of anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish terrorism from the joint struggle. This says little, however, about the readiness of the Arabs to comply in practice. Arab governments do not have to tip off Germany of, forthcoming anti-Jewish attacks, and as a Bonn official conceded. "We cannot force them." "We have to try to get as much cooperation as possible," another said. "Then we will have to see what results we get."

THE RESULTS will hardly be worth mentioning, according to a German expert. He points out that there are three major reasons why Arab states cannot be expected to go along with the German government's plan. Even moderate Arabs identify with the Palestinian terrorists' aim of fighting Israel. Therefore, while many Arabs may think attacks like that in Istanbul embarrassing or even disgusting, most will not reject the synagogue mass murder totally. Second, the chances of an Arab regime tipping off Europeans about an anti-Jewish attack to be mounted by fellow-Arabs are slim, as this would contradict the prevailing Arab sense of identity – and would endanger the regime it disclosed.

Finally, it is not sure that even Arab intelligence services would know of an attack in advance.

A security expert views close cooperation between Arab and European intelligence on this issue as unrealistic. Another well-informed observer also doubts that German intelligence could effectively penetrate Arab terrorist organizations – even after training by Arab specialists. This can be accomplished only by Arab services, or by Israeli intelligence, the observer says, even though German intelligence, too, recruits Arabists.

Arab countries would pose political conditions for discussing terrorism, says Dr. Udo Steinbach, direc*tor of the German Orient Institute in* Hamburg. He points out that Arabs do not view Palestinian terrorism independently of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Even moderate Arab states are unlikely to engage in such a dialague unless the European Community presents its own concept of a Mideast solution which would be at least negotiable for the Arabs.

Dr. Steinbach thinks that whatever cooperation may be forthcoming from Arab countries cannot be achieved through the Arab League, which is not even capable of organizing its own summit conference.

WHAT, then, has Germany to gain from the pursuit of this particular anti-terrorism foia morgana?

First, it is by no means opposed to Mideast political talks with Arab countries, in a package deal with anti-terror deliberations.

Also, while getting Arabs to cooperate in the protection of Jewish and Israeli targets would please the Germans, in political terms. Germany's main political gain would be in preventing Arab terrorist attacks against Americans, at least in Europe. Israel is not Germany's protecting power; the U.S. is. Any Arab concession on anti-American terror is as valuable for Bonn as a murdered American is politically disruptive.

On the other hand, making reassuring noises from time to time toward the Jews – on whatever issues – is deemed necessary by some German politicians. Thus, a veteran Jewish activist sees Ost's "special responsibilty" statement mainly as a public relations exercise on behalf of Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

'Trevi' plays leading European role

Yossi Lempkowicz
Brussels Correspondent

THE SO-CALLED "Trevi Group," which unites the interior and justice ministries, as well as the police and intelligence services, of the 12 European Community states, is the most efficient anti-terrorist structure within the EEC. Last April, pressed by events, including the U.S.-Lybian crisis which followed a rash of terrorist attacks against Americans in Europe, the group met in The Hague to discuss further cooperation against terrorism and decided that more regular meetings would be necessary to exchange among the "twelve" the information and experiences gathered by each state. Another structure, the "toika" – the current (British), former (Dutch) and future (Belgian) presidents of the EEC – has a special mission: to coordinate the activities of the "Trevi Group" and to contact non-EEC states – essentially the U.S. and the Council of Europe – for further exchanges. The essential role of the "Trevi Group" is to assess the potential terrorist threats and to study concrete measures which, for security reasons, are not revealed.

The 12 have decided to create a common data bank on suspects and to classify the more dangerous and active states suspected of supporting terrorist activities. Among these states are Libya, Iran and Syria.

For more efficiency, the European ministers in charge of security have decided to coordinate their work with the their foreign affairs collegues who have to take political action against the suspected states. Early this year, the 12 states decided to take diplomatic measures against the Libyan regime by reducing the staff of its embassies in Europe and restricting the movement of remaining Libya diplomats.

However, despite the repeated pledges to reinforce the fight against terrorism, the 12 EEC states have come to the conclusion – especially after the bloody attacks in Istanbul and Karachi – that more international cooperation is necessary.

"We must now really find exactly who are the instigators and executants of these attacks," said Italian Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, after an informal EEC meeting last Sunday near London. In order to stress the interest of the U.S. to cooperate more closely with the European countries against terrorism, several U.S. envoys, including UN Ambassador Vernon Walters and Deputy Secretary of State Johnathan Whitehead, have been sent to various European capitals for consultations.

Within the Council of Europe (which includes 21 European states, including Turkey), there is also a great interest in finding a strategy against terrorism. An important conference will be held in Strasbourg in November. The European Convention on Terrorism, adopted within the Council of Europe, is a multilateral instrument against terrorism. Despite its limitations (it is mainly a judicial instrument), it is for the moment the European institutions' sole concrete response to terrorism.

A report which will be presented at the November meeting calls for common political and economic sanctions against states responsible for giving direct or indirect support to international terrorism.

*Moreover, the report also prop*oses the creation of a new anti-terrorist ministerial body which would be open to democratic European and non-European countries.

France ends quiet summer braced for violence

Michel Zlotowski/Post Paris Correspondent

AFTER A quiet summer, Paris has again become the target for terrorism from the Middle East. As usual, it started with a threatening handwritten message sent September 1 to the French Press Agency (AFP) in Paris, demanding the immediate release of three men jailed in France: George Ibrahim Abdallah, Varudjian Garabidjian and Anis Naccache.

Naccache led the hit-team that tried to murder former Iranian prime minister Shahpur Bakhtiar in Paris in 1980. He succeeded in killing an old Jewish lady, *Bakhtiar's neigh*bour, because she opened her door at the wrong moment.

In 1983 at Paris's Orly Airport Garabidjian headed an Armenian group that killed eight people in the passenger queue for a flight bound for Turkey.

Abdallah was caught carrying too many different passports but he is regarded as the leader of the Lebanese terrorist group "The Lebanese Revolutionary Armed Fraction." Among other deeds, this group claimed responsibility for the murders in 1982 in Paris of the American military attaché Charles Ray and the Israeli diplomat Ya'akov Bar-Simantov.

The threat was very clear: If those three men were not set free, terrible things would happen. The letter was signed "Supporting Committee for Arab and Near East Political Prisoners" (CSPPA).

The French government was unaware as to what attitude to adopt. During the summer, the authorities were going to parole Abdallah, because he had served almost half of his term.

The Americans were outraged at the idea that the French were on the verge of releasing a man who had probably ordered the killing of Charles Ray. In an unusual move, the American Ambassador in Paris decided to file a legal complaint against Abdallah, thus making it clear that Washington wanted this man to be tried and, if possible, convicted for the murder.

Abdallah's friends got nervous. They planted an explosive device in a Paris subway car on September 4, during rush hour. A passenger heard a little crack, opened the abandoned bag under his seat and turned pale: the package contained five kilos of highly explosive pentrite, connected to a detonating fuse. For some reason, the pentrite did not go off. Four days later, the CSPPA planted a bomb that killed a female clerk and wounded 18 people at the townhall post office right under the offices of Jacques Chirac, the French prime minister. At the moment the bomb exploded, Chirac was chairing a meeting on security and terrorism.

Less than one hour after the attack, a tense Chirac appeared on television, reading a communique warning that France would hit those implicated both directly and indirectly in terrorist attacks against his country and its citizens. But the prime minister did not go into detail. In particular, he did not say that the government refused to give in to the demands of the terrorists, nor did he condemn the blackmail.

IN FACT, the French government seems to have adopted a very flexible attitude toward terrorist threats. Appearing on television on September 6, Interior Minister Charles Pasqua said: "It is certainly out of the question to free Abdallah, but if a decision has to be taken someday, it will not be taken publicly."

The fight against terrorism has divided the government into two camps: one group wants to get rid of Abdallah, and thus put an end to the attacks; the other, taking Israel as an example, says that negotiating with terrorists only paves the way for further attacks.

The question also divides the security forces. Sharing information on terrorists means sometimes revealing strange deals. It is common knowledge that French officials had reached an agreement in the early 1980s with some Middle East terrorist organizations by which in exchange for free passage on French territory, the "operatives" would not harm French citizens. Feuding between competing security services ended the deal when French counter intelligence arrested a couple of friends of "Carlos."

The naive attitude of French officials in the first days following the 1981 elections allowed terrorists to root themselves firmly in France. After years of battling the internal extreme leftist terrorist group "Action Directe" (direct action), the Socialist government and the president decided to pardon all terrorists then in prison. The reason for that incredible move was that the new leaders were convinced that true left wingers would not use terrorism against a Socialist government.

Most of the freed terrorists im*mediately went underground*. Many of them had links, either ideological or just solidarity with other "freedom fighters," with Middle Eastern terrorist groups. They set up a net*work of caches of weapons* and ammunition to be used against Israeli interests in Paris, against Israelis and Jews, or simply against passersby.

A YEAR after Abdallah's arrest in Lyons, in 1984, French counter intelligence discovered a weapons cache in Paris, including the gun that had been used to kill Ray and Bar-Simantov.

The apartment's address was listed in Abdallah's papers. The French daily Le Monde revealed that Abdallah, *pretending to be an Alge*rian engineer, walked into a Lyons police station and asked for protection, convinced that members of the Mossad were tailing him.

Abdallah was partly right: he was indeed being followed, but by agents of French counter intelligence who successful retraced his itinerary from northern Lebanon to Lyons. Abdallah, according to Le Monde worked for a group inside the Syrian regime and for George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Is he still employed by these "friends"? The French police doubt it, since the "terrorist attacks perpetrated by his followers in France had one and only aim: to free him. There were no revolutionary claims, no "freedom declarations," just "we want Abdallah."

Why then also ask for the other two? According to intelligence sources, all three were members of the Lebanese Communist Party in their younger days.

Obviously, Interior Minister Charles Pasqua would like to free Abdallah. But the matter is now in the hands of justice, and the justice minister publicly declared that he had an "Israeli type" attitude: no surrender to terrorism. Thus, the French government's attitude in the fight against terrorism appears to be shadowboxing – hitting very hard, but only swatting air.

LIMITS OF POWER: Rt. Hon. Sir Julian Amery M.P., Britain; Mr. Alfred Atherton, USA; Prof. Shlomo Avineri; Col. (Res.) Mordechai Bar-On M.K.; Mr. Maurice Bourges-Maunoury, France; Maj. Gen. (Res.) Shlomo Gazit; Minister of Defence, Mr. Yitzhak Rabin.

EGYPT AND THE ARAB WORLD: Dr. Sylvia Haim, Britain; Prof. Itamar Rabinovich; Dr. Moshe Shemesh; Prof. Sasson Somekh.

ISRAEL: Prof. Yehuda Blum; Prof. Gabriel Cohen; Mr. Mordechai Gazit; Dr. Elchanan Oren; Prof. Ilan Troen.

CONCLUSION: Prime Minister Mr. Shimon Peres.

The Symposium will be held in English. The Ben-Gurion Research Centre will organize transport from Tel Aviv and Jerusalem. The Centre will also assist with accommodation. Preference will be given to those registering in advance. Registration: Ben-Gurion Research Centre, Midreshet Sde Boker, Negev 84 990, Tel. 057-86093, 057-36605.

ROTHSCHILD FELLOWSHIPS
1987 / 1988

1. The purpose of the Rothschild Fellowships is to help young researchers of outstanding academic merit and potential, permanently resident in Israel, to advance in their respective fields.
2. Up to 16 fellowships will be awarded for advanced studies abroad in the academic year 1987/1988.
3. The following institutions of higher education may present candidates:

   Hebrew University of Jerusalem
   Technion — Israel Institute of Technology
   Tel Aviv University
   Bar-Ilan University
   University of Haifa
   Ben-Gurion University of the Negev
   Weizmann Institute of Science
   Everyman's University

4. Candidates must hold the degree of M.A. or Ph.D., or their equivalent, by the end of the academic year 1986/1987.
5. The maximum age of the candidates by September 1, 1987 shall be:
   A) For doctoral candidates — 30 years
   B) For candidates with an M.D. or a D.M.D. degree — 35 years
   C) For post-doctoral candidates:
   in Engineering, Natural or Life Sciences: – 35 years in Humanities, Social Sciences: – 38 years provided that not more than two years have elapsed since the award of the degree.
6. Persons holding positions of tenure at any of the Israeli institutions mentioned above, or already studying abroad, are not eligible for a fellowship.
7. The value of a Rothschild Fellowship is:
   For doctoral candidates — $13,000 and up to $6,000 for tuition fees, where payable.
   For post-doctoral candidates (including M.D. and D.M.D.) — $16,000.
   In addition:
   A travel grant for the Fellow and his or her spouse, and a family allowance of $2,000 for the spouse of the Fellow and $1,000 for each child.
8. Further information and application forms can be obtained from the Academic Secretaries of the above-mentioned institutions of higher education.

Kowtowing to Sharon

THE SHADOW of "Arik the Awful" lay long this week over the land, not to mention the government, as Trade and Industry Minister Ariel Sharon had one of his seasonal fits of political paranoia. As former government secretary Arye Naor reminded us, it was yet another cake he had both had and eaten since becoming a minister – whether denouncing former Premier Menachem Begin as "a charlatan," or savaging both his successors Yitzhak Shamir and Shimon Peres. And this week, he got away with it again. Do either the prime minister or the vice premier really think that Sharon's letter of apology erased his blood libel that Israel's policies caused the pogrom in the Istanbul synagogue? Not to mention that he caused international attention to be diverted from Arab terrorism to himself. Perhaps, Sharon should now have a standard apology printed for future occasions?

Two comments come to mind on Sharon's style: American historian Henry Adams's statement that "Politics as a practice has always been the systematic organization of hatreds;" and Shalom Hanoch's song: "He doesn't stop at the lights/leaving behind him wreck and ruin/Take care, take care/he doesn't stop at the lights."

Arik earned instinctive support from Gush Emunim's secretary Daniella Weiss, as well as Herut MKs Uzi Landau, David Magen, Yoram Aridor, Dov Shilansky and Haim Kaufman. So who needs Meir Kahane?

While Shamir's kowtowing to Sharon is seen as a function of his weak party leadership, and his courtship of Arik in the fight against Deputy Premier David Levy, Peres's kid glove treatment of Arik is less explicable. After all, he reinstated him in a senior cabinet position, from which he was excluded by both Begin and Shamir in the wake of the Kahan Commission's report.

There were two meetings on Sunday of "Sareinu," the Labour Alignment ministerial caucus, before and after the abortive cabinet session. At the former, Peres was reminded of his "firm resolve" during Sharon Crisis No. 1 to "dismiss him without warning and without discussion," should he repeat himself. However at the post-non-cabinet meeting, Peres told his Alignment colleagues that Likud's Finance Minister Moshe Nissim and Labour's Energy Minister Moshe Shahal would negotiate a formula enabling Sharon to properly apologize and so end Sharon Crisis No. 2. This prompted an angry reaction from Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Deputy Premier Yitzhak Navon, Absorption Minister Ya'acov Tsur, Economics and Planning Minister Gad Ya'acobi and Minister-without-Portfolio Ezer Weizman.

Shahal and Health Minister Mordechai Gur kept silent. The premier was warned that any drawn-out negotiations would only cause Labour to become the object of derision. Peres said he wished to give Sharon another chance. If Arik failed to retract he would sack him, Peres promised.

WHILE Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's stone-walling tactics this week strengthened the vocal scepticism about peace prospects aired not only by Likud leaders. Knesset Defence and Foreign Affairs Committee chairman Abba Eban injected a more hopeful note by quoting Benjamin Franklin, America's first diplomat: "I have never known a peace made, even the most advantageous, that was not censured as inadequate, and the makers thereof condemned as injudicious or corrupt."

Eban just got back from London where he was invited to No. 10 Downing Street by Premier Margaret Thatcher, finding her still relishing memories of her Israeli visit. She was apparently concerned about a let-up in U.S. diplomatic efforts, having brought back from her meeting with West Bank leaders a distinct impression of their fears of PLO death threats, should they join any joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

IT WAS instructive to hear U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering's warning – during his first visit to the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange – about the likely impact on future U.S. aid of Congressional budget restrictions, and the need for "Israeli decisions on budget policy, the capital market and the bureaucracy." Anyone listening in the Kirya?

Ariel Sharon... having his cake and eating it. (Israel Sun)

U.S. Ambassador Pickering... warning on aid. (Reuter)

THERE's still no agreement as to the identity of our next ambassador to Washington. I gather that Peres sent out feelers to Eban and Ya'acobi about taking the job. Both turned him down.

Meanwhile, Shamir still favours Hanan Baron, No. 2 in the foreign ministry hierarchy, for the job. I gather that Minister-without-Portfolio Moshe Arens's lobbying for the post for his perennial candidate for every job going, Ambassador to the UN Benyamin (Bibi) Netanyahu, won't get far. This is not only because of Labour's dislike of his far-right positions, but due to objections from Shamir's circle – from aide Yossi Ben-Aharon to Deputy Foreign Minister Ronnie Milo. One also hears talk from "senior Likud sources" of tailoring the job of prime minister's adviser on counter-terrorism, fleshed out as a roving ambassador, for Bibi, but Shamir's circle don't take to the idea.

WAS MK Yitzhak Moda'i discussing his political overdraft with Bank Leumi chairman Eli Hurwitz, when they were seen breakfasting at the Tel Aviv Hilton hotel earlier this week? His old party ally, Liberal treasurer Zvi Renner, has certainly complicated things by splitting the party's Histadrut faction from the Likud bloc.

FRIENDS sent me The New York Times dated May 29th, containing a paid advert from Pan American chairman Edward Acker, announcing "our far-reaching security programme....thorough screening of passengers and airport facilities." Excluding Karachi, where Pan Am's captain set new norms of airline conduct by abandoning the passengers and stewardesses.

NA'AMAT general secretary Masha Lubelsky is in daily phone contact with her friend, National Assembly of South African Women's leader, Deborah Mabiletsa, who hosted her recent visit there. Mabiletsa, a graduate of the Histadrut Afro-Asian Institute, thanked her for Na'amat's condolence cable to the families of the victims of the recent violence. The black African women leader told Lubelsky they had transcribed her message of sympathy onto banners brandished at the funeral processions.

MK Dov Ben-Meir is beginning to sound like Yair Nitzani's comic creation on Galei Zahal, Hashem Tamid, who's motto is "I'm nobody's sucker!" Especially so, when pressed to return his Tel Aviv municipal car and driver, in keeping with State Comptroller Yitzhak Tunik's criticism of some MKs' "fringe benefits." Ben-Meir's reply: "Why only me?"

A DUTCH Keren Hayesod delegation led by Jaap Mayers and John Manheim attended the opening of the Ramat Hasharon sports centre, in the Morasha quarter, for which they raised $3m., of which $600,000 came from the Van Leer Foundation. The ceremony was attended by Minister Weizman and local council chairman Moshe Verbin. The basketball facility was inaugurated in a game between Tel Aviv Hapoel and the Dutch champions, Nashua-den Bosch, whose manager, Houb van den Boogard brought them along at their own expense.

Manheim told me of Dutch Jewry's concern over anti-Semitic incidents at a recent football game between Amsterdam's Ajax and The Hague club, when some of the latter's fans shouted "Get out Jews," in reference to Jewish members of Ajax's management.

AT WEDNESDAY'S premiere of his Kol Demama dance company's new works, dancer Moshe Efrati showed not only his artistic gifts, but his grasp of politics and public reactions, by bringing Education Minister Navon to rescue his troupe from threatened closure.

NEW YORK Governor Mario Cuomo's caughter, Madeleine complained on returning from Jerusalem – according to The New York Post's columnist Cindy Adams – of rude treatment over a $10 payment for her mislaid King David Hotel room key. Hotel general manager Yossi Heksch assured me that what worries the hotel that accommodated the late Anwar Sadat and Premier Thatcher "is not $10 but the security aspect."

AFTER shepherding ADL's new national chairman Burton Levinson around the VIP circuit here, ADL associate national director Abraham Foxman, flew off with its Israel office director Harry Wall to Istanbul, to attend the mass funerals of the bloodbath victims, as part of world Jewish solidarity with Turkish Jewry.

The poison of cynicism

TORA TODAY / Pinhas H. Peli

"REMEMBER WHAT Amalek did unto you by the way as you came forth out of Egypt, how he met you by the way... therefore... you shall blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under the heaven: you shall not forget" (Deuteronomy 25:17-19).

Rarely does Tora use such strong language in order to emphasize one of its commandments: "Remember... You shall not forget!" Furthermore, to blot out Amalek constitutes not only a commandment which is incumbent upon Israel, but also a promise by God Almighty, who assures us: (Exodus 17:14) "I will utterly blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under the heaven."

Who was Amalek? In contrast to impressive landmarks left behind by the civilizations and cultures of Assyria and Egypt, Aram or even Edom, there is hardly any evidence in sources outside the Bible itself of the existence of Amalek, the people destined to be, in a sense, an everlasting "partner" of Israel in the unceasing war between them that is to go on "from generation to generation" (ibid., verse 16).

We are enjoined to "blot out" the "remembrance" of Amalek. In other words, we confront Amalek not only as a specific concrete people, but also as a memory, as an idea: "Amalekism." What was it that was so heinous about Amalek and what it represented?

Answers to this question were sought by Jewish thinkers throughout the ages from the early rabbis in the Talmud and Midrash to the rationalist philosophers in medieval and modern times. The war with Amalek, resulting in the order to totally "blot" it out, has also caused considerable uneasiness to the contemporary mind, sensitized, as it were, to the awful dimensions of genocide.

THUS, WHILE Amalek stands for a certain nation which appeared on the stage of history at a given time, it is portrayed in Jewish thought as a force present in the universe in direct antithesis to the universal force identified with Israel. Israel represents the idea of the meaningfulness of the created world, the belief that the spirit is often mightier than physical strength – while Amalek represents the "other side," the position held by the cynical and coldly calculating materialist.

Amalek must be constantly "remembered" not because it fought against Israel, as did so many other nations. Amalek is singled out because of the timing and historical setting selected for its war. What was Amalek's reason for starting a war? Malbim (1809-1879), a modern classic among Tora commentators, lists five possible reasons which usually serve as a casus belli; none of them was present in the case of Amalek's first campaign against Israel.

The reasons are: 1) A desire for conquest and occupation of territory. But Israel was "on the way" and did not possess any territory of its own. 2) Pre-emptive war in order to prevent the enemy from attacking. Israel was just coming "out of Egypt" and was not headed in the direction of "Amalekland". 3) A clash between two nations. There was no such clash, as the Israelites were only passing by there "by chance." 4) To demonstrate powerful military strength to the world. Amalek encountered Israel while they were at their lowest, "faint and weary." 5) Religion. This, too, does not apply here, as Tora testifies that Amalek "feared not God" and thus could not have had religious motives.

Neither was Amalek a party to the conflict between Israel and Egypt, nor between Israel and the peoples in the land of Canaan. Why then did it embark on this war?

WE MUST look at the global map as it appeared at that time. Israel had just gone out of Egypt amidst spectacular miracles; the universe was still ringing with echoes of freedom and faith: world media carried the startling story of a small nation winning over the enslaving superpower, Egypt. For the first time in human history the cycle of tyranny was broken, and with it came the collapse of the entire system of man-made objects of worship. The whole world was stunned, observing the scene with awe and admiration, startled to hear the voice of a God who is at one and the same time creator of the universe, liberator from human bondage and teacher of justice and equality for all.

It was indeed one of humanity's finest hours: only the brutal cynicism of Amalek broke the spell which may have marked the beginning of a new chapter in human history.

Amalek is blamed in the Tora with asher karcha ba-derech (Deut. 25:18), usually rendered "who chanced to meet you on the way," but some rabbis prefer to translate it "who cooled you on the way" (karcha from kor, cold, not from mikre, chance). Amalek rushed to pour cold water on the fire of enthusiasm and faith generated by Israel and its miraculous deliverance from Egypt. Amalek intercepts Israel "on the way" (a fact repeated twice, verses 16 and 17), trying to make sure that Israel was stopped "on the way" and never would get to its final destination which was Tora and Eretz Yisrael.

THE WARS of Amalek against Israel take on various forms, they are not always so open and direct. More often than not, they appear in the form of "sober," even "friendly" advice or "objective" learned appraisals of Israel's doings. Amalek very often does not dare to come out in forthright opposition to Israel's visionary drives: instead, he chooses "to cool" them, to cast undermining doubts, to express "concern." It was suggested in Jewish mystical writings that the numerical value of Amalek in Hebrew (ayin = 70; mem = 40; lamed = 30; kof = 100, total: 240) equals that of safek, meaning doubt (samech = 60; peh = 80; kof = 100, total: 240). A warning that the Amalek of doubt could sometimes eat into a vision which is "on the way" to fulfilment and thus nibble away at it and kill it altogether. This Amalek must be relentlessly "blotted out."

Like all cynics who "know the price of everything, the value of nothing," Amalek could not survive in a world based on faith and trust in the future realization of human goals and aspirations which were manifested by the recent history of Israel. None of the logical reasons causing war were there, but this did not stop Amalek. He represented a logic all his own. According to this "logic" there is purpose in sheer undermining, defaming, delegitimizing, cutting off in its bud, any sign of hope wherever it appears.

This Amalek is not a one-time historical mishap. As long as Israel lives among the nations as proclaiming hope and meaning, Amalek too lives among them, promulgating despair and absurdity. The war between the two is thus inevitable. Hence the commandment passed "from generation to generation" to "blot out" Amalek's memory, to curb his influence on Israel and on world politics.

Rabbi Joseph B. Soloveitchik, the greatest living halachic (Jewish law) authority, argues that the commandment to "blot out" Amalek applies nowadays to any nation that could be identified as Amalek inasmuch as it represents in its very being the evil idea and destructive "message" of Amalek. One is enjoined by Tora then and now, "to remember" to watch out for Amalek wherever, whenever, and in whatever form he may appear.

Columbus – the Israeli connection

WATCHING Christopher Columbus battling so desperately to sell to sceptical experts his idea of sailing West to get East, I found myself wondering what dreadful things would have happened to the world if he had not ultimately succeeded in getting support from the King and Queen of Spain. At one stage, his scheme was referred by Queen Isabella to a commission, headed by her confessor, Fray Hernando de Talavera. We know only too well what commissions and committees are like: the Talavera commission, inevitably turned down Columbus's project as impractical.

To be fair, I must admit that the commission was not so far wrong. Columbus, despite all that research we saw him doing at the expense of his family life, grossly underestimated the diameter of the earth, and the problem of getting to Japan, China and India simply by shouting, "Westward ho!"

In the first episode of the serial, we were shown shots of Columbus frantically reading authorities and picking up clues from sailors who had gone West, and we were supposed to infer that he was a genius. In fact, he was just darn lucky that he tripped over the West Indies and the continent of South America, even though he thought he had reached Asia. Still, being lucky is what genius is all about.

The episode naturally made me wonder what would have happened if Ferdinand and Isabella had accepted the findings of the commission and turned Columbus down flat. In the end, of course, somebody or other would certainly have found America: you can't snub such wonderful people as the Americans forever, not to mention the fast bowlers of the West Indies.

But even the mere thought that we might have to wait for many years for the Americas to be discovered, if the commission had had its way, is terrifying. The repercussions for the Jewish people would have been disastrous.

Just think, if Columbus had not found South American when he did, we would never have seen Diego Maradona kicking and fisting his way to victory in Mexico. We might have had to muddle along somehow without Hollywood, the Model T Ford, Mark Twain, chewing-gum, Abraham Lincoln's wisecracks and speeches, Ella singing Cole Porter, apple pie, hamburger stalls, hot dogs, Hadassah, jazz, U.S. economic aid for Israel and the special relationship with Israel, the Statue of Liberty providing a haven for "our tired, our poor, our huddled masses dreaming to breathe free, the wretched refuse of our teeming shore," i.e. our yordim. Without America, the whole quality of life would have been impaired for us.

These fancies, apparently so whimsical and absurd, are inspired by seeing a silly Second Look programme devoted to the aftermath of the Challenger disaster. Because President Ronald Reagan is paying timid attention to the findings of investigative commissions, the exploration of space has been suspended.

Somewhere out there the inhabitants of some planet are waiting anxiously to be discovered, so that we can bring to them the benefits of our civilization, as Columbus brought the glories of Christianity to the indigenous inhabitants of the Americas whom he despoiled and enslaved.

Columbus...Plain lucky?

IT IS NOT often that we get a thriller, apparently without great pretensions to being a work of art, that proves to be a major creative achievement. This happened to Graham Greene's self-styled "entertainments" and to the early spy stories of John le Carre'. Now we have another example of a thriller proving to be a real contribution to television history – Edge of Darkness.

This is not a serial for people who like to relax in their armchairs in a gentle semi-stupor after a hard day's work, while they are entertained by well-known and well-liked heroes coping with crimes that require little cerebration but are supported by some snappy dialogue.

With Edge of Darkness you have to pay attention all the time. The plot turns and twists like a cobra dancing to the tune of a snake-charmer. We are kept wondering what is going to happen next, while we are trying to analyse what we have just seen. Director Martin Campbell never bothers to dot i's or cross t's: if we miss some vital clue, perhaps a facial expression or a throw-away remark, it is our own fault that subsequent scenes become incomprehensible. Campbell's camera does not deign to dwell long on any scene. Generally, the photography is original and exciting, although at times it verges on gimmickry.

In fact, I must admit that I found it essential to tape the film and play it over on a video to comprehend everything that happened.

Even with the playback, I still do not understand how Craven got out of the MI5 computer building into the foyer of the Barbican theatre, going to see a play about incest with Gaia's delectable Clemmie, or why trade unionist Godbolt was so enmeshed in the spider's-web of arch-villain Bennett.

The introduction of Emma's spirit and Craven's memories of her are skilfully interwoven into the action. Over the film hang the poisoned radioactive mists of Northmoor: in some ways we feel that here is an echo of Wuthering Heights, with Cathy's ghost prowling around those Yorkshire moors. This effect of a haunting is intensified by the remarkable music of Eric Clapton and Michael Kamen, as well as the sound effects of somebody inappropriately named Dickie Bird. Dominating everything, of course, is some very fine acting by Bob Peck as Craven. It is not easy to portray a mixture of strength, obduracy, sensitivity and imagination, but he manages to do so.

At one stage in the film, Joe Don Baker, acting the part of the CIA colonel, remarks, "The political climate does not favour heterogeneity. That is why we have to kill half a million people to make a country safe for democracy." One might say that the television climate does not favour heterogeneity either. It is a long time since the BBC went so far outside the safety of the easily recognizable: Edge of Darkness reminds me of early, adventurous British work before moulds were created.

I am looking forward to the denouement with hope, mixed with dread that it will be anti-climactic.

A SERIES that is obviously going to enrich our lives considerably is Tales From the Dark Side. I withheld judgment on it, even though I enjoyed the first episode, because all to often I have gone out on a limb on the basis of one episode, only to find subsequent ones far below the standard set.

We have now seen three stories, with the second and third superior to the first. The second, about the marvellous word-processor that obeys a command to delete an unpleasant wife and child, was very funny, although very untrue to life.

My own experience with word-processors is that such a request would be met with the frigid response, "Invalid command"; or maybe a curt, "Cancel operation: Editor must try again;" or merely a series of beeps like those used in the Dudu Topaz word game. (Incidentally, I was very distressed that sexologist Ruthie lost this week, thereby demolishing my theory that expertise about sex must bring success in all ventures.)

This week's show, about the ghost of the wicked punter out to break bookie Tommy Vail by using inside knowledge picked up in hell, was first-rate. It demonstrated the danger of relying on a wall clock instead of on one's own digital timepiece. I suppose demons are not equipped with digitals, which would probably not stand up to the climate of Hades.

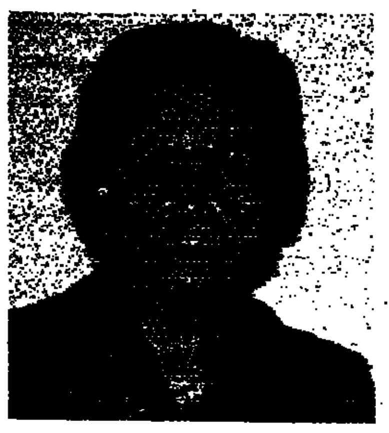
‘Rented’ labourers may get over-due pay

Faction seeks hardship fund for survivors

Ernie Meyer
Post Reporter



Lilly Kopecky

Klaus von Muenchausen

A SIGNIFICANT victory was won last week in the name of those women who were "rented" from concentration camps during World War II to clear away rubble after Allied air raids. Their pay is long over-due.

Private firms, such as Krupp and AEG, made global payments in the 1960s to the Jewish Conference on Material Claims on Germany. But the free Hanseatic City of Bremen, the smallest of the 11 Laender (states) making up the Federal Republic has now taken the lead in the so far unacknowledged responsibility of cities.

The faction of the Greens (Gruenen) in the Bremen Senate wants the city to go it alone in setting up a hardship fund for those surviving women and others who may be in financial need. The SPD (Social Democrats) majority until now preferred to await the Bundestag session scheduled for November 1, when the issue will be debated on the federal level, covering all of West Germany. Last week, however, the Greens (led by Ralf Fueks) won over the SPD fellow parliamentarians for unilateral action by Bremen if the Bundestag decision in November is negative or inconclusive.

"There is no time to be lost," Fueks told the Senate. "Most of the persons concerned are between 60 and 75, and they may not live long enough to benefit from complicated legislation eventually devised by Bonn. Immediate help is needed for those who, for one reason or another, have not been compensated under the existing laws."

People to be helped by the hardship fund are forced labourers, Gypsies (Sinti and Roma), homosexuals and persons forcibly sterilized by the Nazis. The total to be debated by the Bundestag in November is an annual fund of DM250 million, to be financed by the federal government, individual states, municipalities and commericial enterprises.

(It is worth recalling that the huge private concerns which made financial settlements in the 1960s did so largely under pressure from the U.S. government, which would not allow American firms to do business with them otherwise.) The fund envisaged by Bremen, if the city has to act on its own, will of course be much smaller. A general law on compensation for slave labour awaits the signing of an official peace treaty.

Help for Jewish persons concerns the perhaps 200 survivors of the 800 young Jewish women sent to Bremen from Auschwitz – at the request of the Bremen authorities – to do rubble clearing and work in factories for prefabricated housing. Of the 200, about 140 live in Israel, while the rest are scattered in Hungary, the U.S. and other countries.

In April 1985, on the 40th anniversary of the end of the war, 14 of the survivors accepted an invitation by the City of Bremen and by the townlet of Stuhr-Obernheide, where their concentration camp had been located. The Israel contingent of the visitors was led by Lilly Maor, of Haifa. The groundwork for the "reunion" had been laid by research into the Nazi past by Bremen state archivist Dr. Hartmut Mueller.

But Dr. Mueller dealt only with the moral-historical aspect of the matter. The question of payment has been pushed by an unlikely pair of activists – the scion of a family belonging to the old German nobility, Freiherr Klaus von Muenchhausen, and Lilly Kopecky, of Tel Aviv, one of the leaders of the Committee of Auschwitz Survivors in Israel. The two met in Tel Aviv at the begining of last year, and their efforts have now resulted in the decision taken last week by the Bremen Senate.

THERE HAS been a price to pay for this achievement. Von Muenchausen has been suspended from his job as a social worker with the Bremen Municipality. This action was taken initially when he and Lilly Kopecky protested against the use in Bremen schools of text-books which described Zionism as a fascist ideology. The books were withdrawn, but when Von Muenchhausen also took up the cause of the Jewish slave labourers his city had employed, he was suspended.

He is fighting for reinstatement.

Klaus von Muenchhausen was born in Silesia in 1944, the third of seven children of Freiherr Gerhard von Muenchhausen, a banker who later worked for the Volkswagen concern. The elder Muenchhausen returned from Russian captivity only in 1949, his son Klaus says he does not know what rank his father held in the Wehrmacht during the war.

Klaus's grandparent still occupied the family seat at Schwoebber castle in Lower Saxony. The name of von Muenchhausen is, of course, known throughout Germany from the stories one of his forebears wrote in the 18th century. "My forefathers were in the Holy Land before me, as Crusaders," Klaus quipped during an interview with The Jerusalem Post in Tel Aviv recently, on his fifth visit to the country.

At the age of 18 Klaus ran away from home and worked as a cook to finance his studies in sociology, in which he later lectured at Berlin University. Moving to his mother's home town of Bremen in 1980, he worked in the city's social welfare department, specializing in the problems of foreign Gastarbeiter. Becoming interested in anti-Semitism "as a German problem," he met some of the former slave labourers invited to Bremen in 1985.

Klaus von Muenchhausen sees an important aspect beyond mere financial compensation in the case of the slave labourers. "Until now knowledge about the destruction of the Jews was considered as having been the secret of the SS," he said. "But when during the war the administration of concentration camps sent form letters to municipalities, offering them slave labourers, this secret became common knowledge around city halls."

Incidentally, when Klaus asked his father for financial help after his suspension last year, the elder Von Muenchhausen refused with the words: "There is an eternal curse on the Jews for having murdered our Lord Jesus. They never stay more than one generation in one place."

Klaus's personal friend and partner in the current struggle is Lilly Kopecky, 73, who survived Auschwitz and other camps, although she was not in the group employed by Bremen. As a leader of the Israel Auschwitz committee, the group of 80 "Bremen" women in Israel, headed by Lilly Maor, empowered her to act on their behalf.

Kopecky told The Post that the claims of the group are strictly for wages, not for restitution. At a rate of about DM10,000 a year (including interest), this could involve Bremen in an outlay of DM2m., if all the survivors can be located. Hamburg, Frankfurt, Duesseldorf and other cities may later also become involved.

If it emerges that legal action will become necessary to fore Bremen to pay, she added, the German Aktion Suehnezeichen (Action for Forgiveness) movement has offered to cover the costs, Kopecky added.

Bremen records show that on June 15, 1944 the city's governing mayor himself applied for the use of slave labourers. As a result the SS at Auschwitz despatched 500 Jewish women from Hungary and 300 from Poland. As late as March 1, 1945, only weeks before the end of the war, Bremen officials sent a cheque for 48,261 Reichs Mark to the concentration camp at Neuengamme, which was responsible for the prisoners, Kopecky said.

Slave labourers clear rubble in Bremen.

The ordeal of being a slave labourer

LILLY MAOR describes life as a slave labourer.

I was taken to Auschwitz in April 1944 from my native city of Györ in Hungary when I was 19 years old. After six weeks I was "selected" with another 500 Hungarian girls and women and sent to the Hindenburg Barracks in Bremen, to do rubble clearing.

When the barracks was destroyed in an air raid, we were moved to a labour camp at Obernheide, about 20 km. from Bremen.

We had to get up at 3 o'clock in the morning to make our way to work. At first we went part of the way by train, but when the railway lines were bombed, we were taken by truck. When petrol became unavailable, we had to go all the way on foot. This was a terrible ordeal, especially during the hard winter of 1944-1945, in our undernourished condition and with inadequate clothing.

During the frequent air raids, we had to remain in the open, exposed to the bombs. Almost as painful as the physical danger were remarks by German civilians, who saw us at work. A German woman once asked the SS superviser of our group: "Are these murderers?" But there were also instances when stall-keepers in the fruit market seemed to look the other way when prisoners filched some vegetable.

The women employed in the Friedrich Rodiek factory for building blocks and prefabricated building components were the subject of bitter complaints by the management. In a letter to the commandant of the Obernheide camp in Novem*ber, 1944, the manager complained* that the women were ordered to work even though they were sick. "The productive capacity of these sick or half-sick women is generally nil. Why don't you keep these people at the camp? Be it noted that even experienced women only do about 20 per cent of the work done by a male worker." (There seems to be no explanation why Auschwitz sent women, rather than men, to do this work.)

Subsequently there is haggling about reducing the hourly wage from 0.60 Reichs Mark to 0.25.

While only ten of the women died during their stay in Bremen, many did not survive the death march to the Bergen-Belsen camp early in April, 1945, and the typhoid fever raging there.

After liberation Lilly Maor married another camp survivor. The couple came to Israel in 1949 and have four children and five grandchildren. Ernie Meyer

Warning – drunk drivers on the road

Andy Court

THE UNSKILLED Israeli driver is becoming the unskilled Israeli drinker, and the combination is proving increasingly fatal on the nation's roads.

So says Dr. Reuven-Ben Dov, a family physician who directs the Mount Pleasant Hospital Addiction Studies Foundation in Jerusalem. Ben-Dov cites studies conducted outside Israel which indicate that inexperienced drivers who are not accustomed to drinking alcohol run a five times greater risk of getting into an accident after drinking than experienced drivers who regularly use alcohol.

"The average driver outside of Israel is a better driver and a better drinker in the sense that he's been drinking for years and is able to 'hold his liquor' to some extent," he said. "But the Israeli driver, if he's already less skilled when he's sober, give him a few drinks and the chances of his getting into an accident are much higher than the driver outside of Israel because drinking is a new habit fot him."

To prove this thesis, the Addiction Studies Foundation will soon launch a project in conjunction with the Hebrew University School of Public Health. Researchers will question all car accident victims in one Jerusalem hospital in an attempt to determine how many had been drinking before the accident and whether they were experienced or occasional drinkers.

"We don't know if the drunk drivers here are addicted to alcohol, or if they're just going out to a party in Tel Aviv one night, drinking a lot, and then killing themselves," Ben-Dov said.

It's already clear, however, that drunk driving is a problem in Israel. According to a study by Drs. Uzi Meltzer and Eliahu Richter of the Hebrew University, nearly two-thirds of drivers killed in single-vehicle accidents between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. had blood-alcohol levels over the legal Israel limit, which is 50 mgm. per cent.

Police figures also show a rise in drunk driving. Convictions for accidents caused by people driving while intoxicated rose from zero in 1975 to 70 in the first half of 1984, according to Eytan Ben-Yehoshua, head of the Road Safety Authority.

TO PREVENT the rate of Israeli deaths from drunk driving from reaching the astronomical proportions in the United States and England, Ben-Dov recommends several measures.

An education campaign should not only convey the message "don't drink and drive," but also explain that a mere two bottles of Israeli beer, drunk within one hour of driving, will raise the average person's blood alcohol level to the legal limit.

Israel's legislators, meanwhile, should lower the legal blood-alcohol limit from 50 mgm. per cent to 20 mg. per cent for drivers under 21 years, and older drivers in their first two years of driving.

Although many people believe that Israel beer is weaker than most imported beer, that is not true, Ben-Dov said. He recommends that the 4.6 per cent alcohol content of standard Israeli beer be reduced to the average level of 3.7 per cent found abroad.

Israel has excellent legislation on drunk driving on the statute book, says Ben-Dov, but its enforcement must be improved. All drivers involved in accidents or traffic violations at night should undergo a quick breathalizer test, and he suggests the erection of night-time road-blocks in selected areas where breathalizer tests would be administered to drivers, before they were let through.

He recommends that all drivers convicted of drunk driving should be referred to the Alcoholism Treatment Centre run by the Ministries of Labour and Social Affairs to see if they have serious drinking problems.

Ben-Dov's recommendations arise from experience in the field. Before immigrating from England, he worked in a treatment clinic for alcoholics and published a book on the subject, The Hidden Alcoholic in General Practice. The Mount Pleasant Hospital Addiction Studies Foundation, of which he is the medical director, is a private institute dedicated to research on alcoholism and drug dependence.

Drunk driving is not currently the major cause of road accidents in Israel, but, according to Ben-Dov, officials must act before Israel follows the example of England and America.

The miracles and obstacles in transplants

Judy Siegel-Itzkovich/Post Reporter

A BONE marrow transplant can take a man from his deathbed and restore him to health to such a degree that he can enjoy a completely normal life. The procedure costs some $10,000 to $15,000 in Israel, but if you had to hospitalize him without a transplant and without curing him, it would cost twice as much.

Dr. Shimon Slavin, an associate professor of internal medicine at Hadassah-University Hospital in Jerusalem, spoke this week about the medical miracles of marrow tansplants before a small group of doctors. They were attending a symposium on transplants during Israel Medical Week.

Slavin, who is an expert in bone marrow transplants, said that the procedure is very complicated and does not always take; the body can reject the foreign tissue. But if it is successful, it can give the patient the gift of normal life.

Candidates for the transplant are those suffering from aplastic anemia (a blood defect in which the marrow can no longer make blood cells), severe deficiency of the immune system, genetic diseases like thalassemia and a large variety of cancers.

There are no religious or ethical problems involving this special type of transplant, said Slavin, because it is given by a live donor and does not harm him; as in the donation of a pint of blood, the body restores itself.

In most cases, the donor must be a relative of the recipient; rarely, the marrow is taken from a marrow bank after being donated by a stranger. The marrow cells can even be kept indefinitely in sub-zero temperatures.

ORGAN transplants are more problematic. Except for kidneys, when a relative can donate one of his own and continue to live on his other kidney, most organs (hearts, livers, corneas) must come from a cadaver.

Israel is a small country with far fewer available organs for tansplant than a country like the U.S. In addition, there is little social consciousness about the need to donate organs after death. Few drivers who receive a donor card attached to their driver's licence actually register for donating organs.

In addition, many religious Jews fear that their body will not be respected or that their organs will be removed in contravention to Halacha.

Pof. Yosef Borman, head of Hadassah's department of cardiac surgery, told the audience that the development of the anti-rejection drug cyclosporine revolutionized heart and other transplants after the field was almost dormant for a decade. In the beginning of the Eighties, there were far fewer rejection problems, and the operations are performed in many hospitals.

Offering an ethical and philosophical view of transplants, Prof. Asa Kasher of Tel Aviv University asserted that society owes transplant surgery to its citizens, as they are helpless and cannot cure themselves.

He added that it was "corrupt" for an elite of government officials and political leaders to benefit from almost unlimited health care here and abroad when it is not available to the ordinary citizen.

The potential donor's wishes should be respected as much as possible, suggested Kasher, but his family had no right to decline a request for an organ after his death if it would save a life.

Suggesting that "if you don't give, you don't get," the professor of philosophy said all citizens should be required to declare officially whether they are willing for organs to be transplanted to others after their death. If so, that person will be "at the top of the list when he needs a transplant." If he refuses, "he'd be at the bottom of the list if he needs a donated organ."

RABBI Avraham Ravitz, head of Jerusalem's Or Sameah yeshiva, said that Jewish law bends over backward to allow transplants in many cases if it will save a life. The main problem, he explained, is that some organs have to be removed from the body before the heart stops beating. The cessation of brain function is not enough for Jewish law to determine the moment of death.

But Ravitz pointed to a Swedish doctor in Gutenberg who claims that he has transplanted livers from persons after their heart stopped.

Permission of the family is important, said the rabbi, since they are halachically bound to bury the relative. Taking an organ without permission could constitute "theft."

The rabbinical authorities are now sitting down with doctors to find a way to increase the number of transplants without violating Jewish law, he concluded.

Only 500.000 tickets numbered from 1 to 500.000 participate in drawings, starting September 26th 1986 and lasting until March 1987. More than 200.000 numbers will win one of the prizes:

2 x 2 Million DM
6 x 1 Million DM
18 x 1 Million DM or
180 x 100.000 DM
5 x 80.000,– DM
200.00 other prizes ranging from 240,– to 75.000,– DM.
40 out of 100 numbers will win.

Order your ticket with the coupon below. Payment may be made after you receive your ticket and invoice or in advance: personal check, traveller's check, bank transfer or cash by registered air mail are welcome.

As soon as we receive your order, we will send you your lottery ticket, the official drawing schedule and the lottery rules.

At the end of each class, you will receive the official list of winning numbers and your ticket for the next drawing.

After each drawing, we notify the winners immediately. Your prize will be paid to you by check or to any bank you desire. There are no German taxes or other deductions.

New course gives relief

Avoiding a strike out in the U.S. lingo game

Christopher Hanson
Washington

A THIRD WORLD diplomat with perfect textbook English is posted to Washington, attends his first cocktail party and encounters a baffling obstacle – the American language.

He might hear people uttering such phrases as:

- "Reagan'll strike out unless he goes on the stump and mounts a real blitz. He needs a grassroots groundswell."
- "Reagan's got to twist some arms and kick some ass on the Hill to rake in those fence-sitters, gypsy moths and boll weevils."
- "Those White House loose cannons are a pain, but Reagan will pull it off – he's still Mr. Teflon."

Strike out? Grassroots? Teflon? Boll weevils? A foreign visitor in such an all-too-common Washington situation might well go slack-jawed with bewilderment.

These strange terms were not taught in his English course, and a standard pocket dictionary is no help.

But there is a solution: A new Smithsonian Institution survival course, "American English in Washington, D.C.," aimed at introducing foreigners to the confusing idiom, metaphor, and jargon of home-grown Yank lingo.

Many Third World politicians come to Washington and find themselves in the same position as the San Diego Padres' Steve Garvey – avoiding the strike out.

According to Pamela Monder, 25, a language scholar who teaches the class, the confusion suffered by our hypothetical diplomat is common to newcomers.

Her vocabulary-building course concludes with a mock cocktail party in which slang-spouting Americans test the 15 students – diplomats, international bank staffers, and business executives from Korea, Sri Lanka, Brazil, France, China and elsewhere.

*AMONG the terms Monder intro*duced in a recent class, at the Natural History Museum not far from the White House, was "three-martini lunch," a well-known Washington institution.

Monder explains: "This is a business lunch that's more than just a lunch, a very expensive kind of glitzy – you remember 'glitzy' (dazzling, gaudy) from last week's lesson – expense-account lunch. You don't pay."

The students were taking thorough notes.

Other terms included "administrative assistant" ("a big, fancy term for a secretary") and "red tape" ("the confusion and delay of doing business in a bureaucratic system.")

"What do you do with red tape?" Monder asked.

"You cut it," one student replied.

Another term stressed during this lesson was "John Hancock," as in "Put your John Hancock," on his.

Asked what the phrase meant, one student, Brazilian interpreter Lina Sattamini, said John Hancock was an insurance company.

"One of your revolutionaries?" asked Bong Chun Koch, a Korean flower shop manager.

Both were right, in a sense. John Hancock, namesake of an insurance company, provided the largest signature on the U.S. Declaration of Independence in 1776.

A GUEST instructor, congressional aide Christophe Tulou, said foreigners could be baffled by the many animal and sporting metaphors in U.S. political lingo.

He explained that boll weevils (named for insects that attack the cotton crop) were conservative southern Democrats in the House of Representatives who tended to back Republican President Reagan. Gypsy moths were moderate Republicans who sometimes opposed Reagan, kicking ass and arm-twisting meant high-pressure verbal persuasion, and striking out was a baseball term for failing.

Going on the stump, Tulou continued, meant giving speeches; a blitz was a public relations campaign; a loose cannon was someone who has gotten out of control; a grassroots groundswell meant popular support; and Mr. Teflon (Teflon being a non-stick frying-pan coating) meant no scandal ever touches Reagan.

The students said they had taken the class for reasons ranging from a desire to comprehend television newscasts to a need to decipher government reports.

American English as normally spoken is challenge enough for foreigners, but Tulou said a Washington variant – bureaucratic English, or "bureaucratese" – is even tougher.

Pentagon reports, for example, recently referred to a "manually powered fastener-driving impact device" (meaning a hammer), and a "frame supported tension structure" (a tent).

Monder said that students probably would need an advanced course to master "bureaucratese."

Even Monder might have been baffled by a government lawyer who was asked at a recent congressional hearing if civil servants should as a practical matter disclose evidence of government corruption.

The government man replied: "I would say that, cost-analysis-wise, it was counterindicated."

In other words, "No."

BASEBALL

Magic number 16 for both AL leaders

NEW YORK (AP). – Boston's Roger Clemens and the California Angels were both struggling.

But they both won on Wednesday night. As a result, the Red Sox and Angels each lead their division by 8½ games, and they have trimmed their magic numbers to 16.

California took 14 innings before getting past Cleveland 7-6.

Clemens, leading the Major Leagues in victories, pitched six innings and raised his record to 22-4 as the Red Sox pounded the Baltimore Orioles 9-4. Jim Rice homered and drove in three runs, helping Clemens and Boston to victory. Clemens gave up six hits and walked two in six innings. Calvin Schiraldi finished for his eighth save.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Rangers 3, Mariners 2

Ruben Sierra's second double of the game drove home pinch-runner Bob Brower from first base, leading Texas over Seattle.

Tigers 11, Brewers 7

Kirk Gibson and Darnell Coles both hit a pair of two-run homers and Detroit pounded Milwaukee in a game featuring eight home runs, the most in the American league this season.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Dodgers 5, Astros 1

Steve Sax was 4-for-4 and Orel Hershiser and two relievers scattered nine hits as Los Angeles ended Houston's four-game winning streak.

Padres 9, Braves 4

San Diego broke a 3-3 tie with six runs in the eighth inning and broke its five-game losing streak with a win over Atlanta.

Reds 14, Giants 2

Cincinnati's Eric Davis hit three home runs, giving him 26 for the year, and 10 homers and 26 RBI in his last 22 games. He has hit 11 of his 44 career homers off San Francisco pitching.

Cardinals 4, Pirates 3

Vince Coleman's ninth-inning triple scored Jose Oquendo with the tie-breaking run. St. Louis had tied the game in the eighth on an RBI single by pinch-hitter Jim Lindeman.

Cubs 8, Phillies 7

SOCCER

France trip in Iceland

REYKJAVIK (Reuter). – Titleholders France stumbled on the first hurdle of their European Soccer Championship defence when they were held to a 0-0 draw by lowly Iceland here.

New-look France, lacking the inspiration of Michel Platini and their poise of old, were hustled off their game by a rugged Iceland side in a match which augurs badly for France's progress in Group Three.

Philippe Vercruysse, playing the midfield role Platini should resume in next month's important follow-up in Paris against the Soviet Union, should have clinched both points in the dying seconds. But he seemed unable to believe his good fortune at gaining possession in the area at the end of one final French attack. He hesitated too long and failed to fasten on to a shot from point-blank range.

Iceland earned the draw, frustrating the World Cup semi-finalists at every turn to repeat the result they achieved last time the two teams met here in the same Championship in 1976.

In Glasgow, Bulgaria, playing some delightful and skilful soccer on the break, were unlucky not to make a winning start to their European Championship challenge when they held Scotland to a 0-0 draw in their Group Seven qualifying match.

The East Europeans, who succeeded in reaching the second round of the Mexico World Cup finals without winning a match, gave the Scottish defence a torrid time during the first half, but eased off after the interval, and seemed content with a draw at the final whistle.

(Reuter telephoto)

Scotland, hoping to shake off the memories of their disappointing exit from the World Cup finals, raised their game after the interval with the introduction of veteran striker Kenny Dalglish as a substitute for Charlie Nicholas.

But not even Dalglish, 35, the Liverpool player-manager who won his 101st cap, could conjure up a goal.

Elsewhere, Wales drew 1-1 with Finland, Eire held Belgium 2-2 in Brussels, and Romania beat Austria 4-0. In a friendly international in Prague, Czechoslovakia beat Holland 1-0.

Stockholm's ugly friendly

STOCKHOLM (Reuter). – Rival groups of fans armed with razors, metal bars and slingshots clashed during a friendly international soccer match between England and Sweden here and there were ugly scenes outside the stadium.

A police spokesman said a British supporter had been stabbed – apparently in the thigh – and was undergoing surgery at Stockholm's Karolinska Hospital. Swedish law prevents the hospital releasing details of his condition or his identity.

Brailovsky's debut likely

TEL AVIV. – Daniel Brailovsky, the Argentinian footballer signed for $300,000 by Maccabi Haifa, is likely to make his debut against Shimshon in a Toto Cup match tomorrow, in Kiryat Haim. Kick-off is at 3 p.m.

Brailovsky, who is expected to play a scheming role together with Baruch Maman, will provide substantial reinforcement in the Haifa attack to strikers Zahi Armeli and Moshe Selektor.

No such luck for Betar Jerusalem, where Uri Malmillian will still be missing. Latest reports say that the Betar management is ready to grant Malmillian a transfer – if a club can be found to pay $265,000 for him. The negotiations between the player and Betar have again turned bitter.

Avi Cohen, too, is still at loggerheads with Maccabi Tel Aviv. The Tel Avivians are the frontrunners for signing Malmillian and suggestions were floated that they agree to the player's request for a transfer to Glasgow Rangers and use the proceeds – about $200,000 – towards paying for the Betar schemer.

But by last night, Maccabi Tel Aviv stood firm in their refusal to release Avi Cohen. Maccabi Tel Aviv play Maccabi Yavne, at the Bloomfield Stadium.

Other first division Toto Cup fixtures:

Bnei Yehuda v. Hap. P. Tikva – Hatikva Quarter 5.30 p.m.

Hap. Tel Aviv v. Mac. Netanya – Bloomfield 6.30 p.m.

Hap. Kfar Sava v. Bet. Netanya – Kfar Sava 3 p.m.

Mac. P. Tikva v. Bet. Tel Aviv – Petah Tikva 3.30 p.m.

Hap. Lod v. Hap. Beersheba – Lod 3 p.m.

Yugoslav coach gets permit for job here

TEL AVIV. – The Yugoslav soccer coach Mihic Milienko has informed the Israel Football Association that he has received a work permit from the Yugoslav authorities enabling him to take the job of National team coach here.

The 52-year-old coach of Red Star of Belgrade now appears as the frontrunner for the job. He is expected to arrive here shortly for a face-to-face meeting with FA officials, who will ask him to begin work here as soon as possible.

The National team's first international of the new season will be against Romania at Ramat Gan on October 8. Romania on Wednesday night thrashed Austria 4-0 in a European championship match

The doctor is out

TEL AVIV. – The continuing saga of Lee Johnson's health problems has yet to be resolved.

Johnson has spent the past week having medical tests on a daily basis. Although he is still considered part of Maccabi Tel Aviv, management have made no secret of their worldwide search for a potential replacement.

The deadline for Maccabi's decision vis-a-vis Johnson is Monday.

Maccabi returned home late last night after reaching and losing in the finals of two pre-season friendly tournaments in Spain, and will meet Don Bosch of Holland in a friendly on Saturday night in Rishon Lezion.

After beating Hapoel Galil Elyon and Hapoel Tel Aviv, the Dutch champions succumbed to National League newcomers Hapoel Jerusalem 91-83 in the capital Wednesday night.

Reactions to the Nazi Olympics

To the Sports Editor

Sir,

Permit me to add some explanations to Paul Kohn's excellent article of August 1 about the 1936 Olympics. None of the three fencing girls winning Olympic honours were Jewish. Elek Schacherer (GM) came from a German-speaking island in Hungary (I think from the Banat), where German farmers and tradesmen settled under the reign of Empress Maria Theresa. As far as we know, no Jewish people went with them. Helene Mayer (SM) must be regarded as a special case. Her mother was not Jewish and this alone, according to our religion, makes Helene non-Jewish. Even if we try to be over-liberal in our views, we must not forget that her mother declared a short time before the games that her daughter wsa not the child of Dr. Mayer! The Germans were able to declare therefore, that Helen Mayer was not Jewish. Ellen Preiss (Austria) was known for her admiration of Hitler. She was an anti-Semite!

I should like to add some remarks about the stand taken at that time by the U.S. Olympic Committee. One of the important members in this committee was Brig. General Merrill, a septuagenarian, who visited Germany in 1935 and was tremendously impressed by what he saw there. He liked the "kind, good German people," and simply could not understand why voices were raised to boycott the Berlin Games because of the racist stand taken under Hitler's rule. He was surprised that people demanded the representation of German Jewish athletes in the German Olympic team. He said: "I don't know about Jews, who excel in sports...." This was at a time, when, including the Los Angeles Games in 1932, no less than 119 Olympic medals had been received by Jewish athletes!

The ever-increasing pressure to boycott Berlin resulted in Avery Brundage, the chairman of the U.S. Olympic Committe (later president of the International Olympic Committee for many years) going on a fact-finding mission to Germany. In Berlin, where he was wined and dined, he met with everybody who counted in the new German Reich. Finally he met representatives of Jewish sports, in the presence of highest-ranking German sport leaders with their entourages. When he asked them if they have Jewish members in their clubs, he got the answer "No," but this did not upset him. He said that no Jews were accepted as members in his own club either! Much more detailed material about what I write here can be found in the excellent book Jewish Sports in the Third Reich by Prof. Dr. Hajo Bernett, in Dr. Robert Atlasz's book Bar Kochba-Hakoah Berlin, Makkabi Deutschland 1898-1938; and in a study made by Dr. Arnd Krueger, who went to Brundage's alma mater and studied there the private collection of his Olympic correspondence and papers.

To the Sports Editor

Sir,

With reference to Paul Kohn's article about the Nazi Olympics and the attitudes of Jewish sportsmen, I am reminded of a young Jewish sportsman from Cape Town, Sid Kiel, who became South Africa's champion hurdler in record time while still a teenager.

He was a certain selection for the SA contingent at the Olympics, but, as a proud Jew, stated that he was not available to go to Nazi Germany.

Later he qualified as a doctor. He was a fine all-round sportsman. Apart from athletics, he was an outstanding cricketer, who was the opening bat and mainstay of the Western Province team. He was also a fine rugby player.

With his fine performances and excellent batting average, he was regarded as a certain choice for a SA team to tour Australia. For reasons known only to the selectors, he was passed over for inferior players, who duly proved to be flops.

Baseball coverage

To the Sports Editor

Sir,

I really liked the last few months' sports section, particularly the wide coverage of baseball. I hope that similar good coverage will be given to American football and English soccer.

Jerusalem. GUY ERAN

To the Sports Editor

Sir

We have been getting better coverage of sports. But you could give us more news about cricket. And what about badminton, field hockey and boxing? Please take this message to heart, and give us every kind of sports coverage, instead of devoting quarter of a page to baseball.

Netanya. M.N. REUB

Martina is no Czech

To the Sports Editor

Sir,

I must object in the strongest possible way to the headline and articles about the U.S. Open in which you and the reporters treat Martina Navratilova as a Czech.

She is not: she is an American. Jews in general, and Israelis in particular, should be very chary about disregarding a person's chosen new nationality. We want people to be Israelis, not foreigners. The same holds true for Americans.

Many sportsmen change their nationalities. Their reasons are their own. But it is unfair to disregard the change.

Of course, it is legitimate to examine whether the former Czech tennis players became so good because of the Czech training system, or due to some other factor in their upbringing.

With regards to both Navratilova and Lendl, you ran a very interesting article in which they said they got no help in Czechoslovakia when they were young.

Avi Temkin reports on a call for a code of morality in the public service

Ethics and political realities

MANY PEOPLE would agree that there is a compelling moral reason for having more money invested in highway improvements: lives would be saved as road accidents are prevented. At the same time, spending more money could refuel inflation. Thus from the economic point of view, it would be advisable not to invest in better roads, at least not for the time being.

This is an example of the kind of problems facing a finance minister. Scarcity involves choice, and choice implies that those making decisions have a system of preferences based on a moral or ethical code. According to Avraham Ariely, the director of the Workshop for Problems of the Economy at the Van Leer Jerusalem Institute, this underlies the need for an open and public code of morals and ethics to which politicians and government officials should adhere.

Ariely, who headed the State Revenue Administration in the Sixties, says his workshop is meant to be a think tank. Some months ago it produced a study about the functions and performance of the Treasury and it is now starting a project on the public health system. But he adds that, unlike similar bodies around the world, this think tank concerns itself very much with normative and ethical questions.

According to Ariely, the only effective safeguard in instances of policy dilemmas is a system of principles and rules of public morality. "Neither scientists, philosophers or politicians are aware of the need for a clear statement of moral issues, and in particular of the need of a code of public morality," he said.

The obvious example that crosses one's mind is the bank shares scandal. All the politicians involved acted in strict accordance with the written law. The commission recommendations did not call for legal action against them. But from a moral point of view, they were implicated and as guilty as those bankers who were forced to resign by the Bejski Commission of Inquiry.

Ariely insists that if a recognized code of moral behaviour for politicians and bureaucrats would have existed, the conclusions of the Bejski Commission would have been completely different.

MORAL rules should concern relations between the citizen and the state. In many instances there is a clear clash between the interests of the individual and those of "society," as defined by politicians and government officials. In democracies a government should strive to harmonize its moves with public opinion and attitudes. Nonetheless there is still ample room for such clash of interests.

Examples of such clashes, not always covered by the law, abound. For instance, when can a finance minister lie? In Israel it is frequently said that regarding devaluations, the man at the helm of the economy can permit himself a "white lie". Yet, people make decisions on the basis of such statements, decisions which in some cases could lead to a large pecuniary loss. "Someone may conclude that since he has been lied to about a devaluation, he has a moral right to cheat the income tax authorities," says Ariely.

Moreover, could not this unwritten authority of the finance minister be extended to other areas, for example trying to hide a large drop in foreign currency reserves, in order to prevent a rash of dollar buying or a wave of speculation?

He adds that the absence of such a code in some way reflects the heritage of liberalism. When governments were not supposed to intervene in the economy, there was little room for moral dilemmas. The market set the priorities and the government could not but follow the market's designs.

But today's situation is different. A small group of officials and politicians are active in the economy and in politics. Extending those areas in which politicians and government officials have informal authority to act against what would be perceived as "moral" or "ethical" could jeopardize democracy.

ARIELY SAYS that the study his workshop did about the Treasury was originally meant to serve as a guide for much needed reform in the ministry's operations. "On second reading, one sees that there are a host of problems which make moral choices necessary," he says.

Among other conclusions, the study had recommended the establishment of an institution that would educate and prepare senior civil servants. Thus, Ariely thinks the answer to many of the problems lies in having educated and moral public officials.

The question is: Who would draft such a code of public morality, and who would approve it? Ariely thinks this should not be left to politicians. Moral rules concerning public behaviour should be influenced by citizens, the media, academia and professional organizations.

Such a code needs to be placed on the public agenda says Ariely. Some months ago, the workshop set up a team to work on the issue, composed of former judges, politicians, policemen and journalists. "Any private group can make recommendations about such a code. It would be approved by the public through democratic processes after thorough consideration and debate," he says.

But Ariely recognizes that such a direct approach, working out and publishing a proposed code of morals for rulers, would be slow and hazardous and almost impossible to implement. As a result he proposes another approach: Pinpointing the moral issues in public administration studies, like the workshop's study on the Treasury, and incorporating recommendations dealing specifically with public morality in the studies' conclusions.

Thus, Ariely thinks a gradual and indirect approach would be possible. By looking at different areas, one at a time, it would be possible to define the issues and the solutions or answers that would flow from a code of public morality.

David Krivine considers reasons for Israel's $5 billion trade deficit

Are there too many officials?

We in Israel have, or have had till recently full employment, yet we produce $5 billion a year less than we consume – that figure being the sum of our trade deficit.

To find out why, Ruth Klinov (in a study put out by the Falk Research Foundation) compares our performance with that of other industrialized countries and reveals two things. First, fewer people join the labour force here than abroad; second, more of those who do join are employed in the public sector.

No more than half the adult population of Israel (aged 15 and over) have civilian jobs. The proportion in France is 55 per cent, in the U.S. 62 per cent, in Japan 64 per cent. The lag is surprising, especially as we have more over-55's working than they do. (Japan of course is an exception, they have more still.)

Government offices in Jerusalem

(Werner Braun)

The chief explanation is our extensive army service. Professional soldiers and young people doing their three-year stint are not included as civilian manpower, and they amount to 11.5 per cent of the total.

Reservists are classified as civilians; how many do they amount to? Under the column headed "Persons temporarily absent from work", in the report, that category came to 5-6 per cent before 1973, and to 9.2 per cent after. Likely explanation: most of them are doing their month-a-year in the reserves. The number called up increased after the Yom Kippur War.

Moreover the over 55's do not serve in the army, which explains their high participation in the civilian labour force.

Let us add military manpower to civilian and see how the total breaks up.

If we assume that two-thirds of those "temporarily absent from work" are doing reserve duty, it turns out that over 15 per cent of the country's total adult manpower serve in the forces.

The proportion of civilian labour in the public sector (education, health, civil service, etc.) is 37 per cent, compared with 30.3 per cent in the U.S., 23.7 per cent in France, 22.5 per cent in West Germany and – what are we to do with these people? – a meagre 17.5 per cent in Japan.

If we add the military, who are public servants too, it emerges that out of every two gainfully occupied individuals in Israel, one is salaried by the government, local authorities or social services. The other half of the work force has to cope with all the country's business activities – agriculture, industry, building, financial services, tourism and so forth.

If we think (like the nurses) that our living standards should not be reduced and if we agree with the Treasury that we must nevertheless pay our way, we have no choice but to slash the number in the public services and step up the number in production.

Leaving the army out, we see from Klinov's figures that a welfare state like Britain makes do with over a quarter less persons (per million inhabitants) in public and personal services. Yet every economy measure here evokes cries of blue murder.

The teachers declare that the Treasury is destroying the educational system; the nurses will strike to the limit unless their numbers are increased; government departments complain that they lack staff (police, telephone operators, postmen) to do the job properly.

How come that other civilized countries look after their population as well as we do, yet manage with fewer people in the service sector? A comparative research project on that topic would be instructive.

Hapoalim outlines package to rescue ailing moshavim

Pinhas Landau

BANK HAPOALIM is proposing a new and wide-ranging rescue package for the crisis-ridden moshav sector.

The bank's plan, announced on Tuesday, comes just days before a public committee is due to present Prime Minister Peres with its own solutions to the financial crisis of the moshavim. Both Hapoalim and Bank Leumi, the two main lenders to the moshavim, are represented on the committee.

Hapoalim's plan is aimed at providing the moshavim with their current financing needs, more efficiently, rescheduling the huge debts that are weighing on many moshavim and eliminating uneconomic units, including entire moshavim, where necessary. Their resources could then be redistributed to those that can stand on their own feet.

According to Richard Armon, who controls Hapoalim's credit operations, two principles should underlie the financial restructuring in the moshav sector. On the one hand, economically viable family farms should be able to obtain finance on the basis of a clear, economically logical and functional division between the moshavim, their buying organizations and the regional plants that they own.

On the other, the existing debt structure with its high interest rates should be improved, and the distribution of resources between family units should be rationalized by the merger or removal of those lacking a solid economic base.

In practical terms, Armon proposes that each moshav have one bank as its co-ordinator, with that bank providing finance to the family farms, through the moshav, and under the supervision of the Agriculture Ministry and the Bank of Israel. State aid should be given through directed-credit funds and partial state guarantees.

All credit would be based on an annual business plan for each family farm and would be given against collateral provided by the family unit, as well as mutual guarantees of the other moshav families given through the moshav itself. Such guarantees would, however, be limited rather than open-ended, and based on the repayment capability of each family unit. This would prevent a recurrence of the present situation in which the mutual guarantee system has been overwhelmed by the size of the debts taken by some units.

(Mike Goldberg)

THE BUYING organizations and the regional plants will each be restricted to its own businesses under Hapoalim's plan. The former will engage in centralized purchase and sale operations using supplier's credit, on behalf of their constituent moshavim, and the latter will concern themselves with their own production and operations. They will no longer be allowed to give credit to moshavim or their organizations for working capital, development or anything else, as was done in the past. The collapse of the buying organizations was the key factor in precipitating the crisis that has engulfed the moshav movement in the last two years.

The rescheduling of current debts should, according to the plan, be done by spreading them over a long time span at preferential rates, with the Treasury, the Jewish Agency, the commercial banks and the organizations themselves all contributing.

At the same time, the possibility of wiping out those farms and units that have no hope of paying their own should be examined, according to the bank. In fact, the Jewish Agency has already begun this process, but the acceptance of this principle by Bank Hapoalim represents a new departure for that bank, which has always been closely associated with the moshav and kibbutz movements and their development.

'Flattery' phone calls are good business in Japan

James Tyson

TOKYO. – An apology, a compliment and the roar of the giant iguana are just a phone call away, thanks to the Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp., which offers a variety of bizarre phone-in tapes.

The Japanese telecommunications giant, spun off by the government last year as a private corporation, offers its subscribers some 15,000 tapes.

"Forgive me," a man banging on a table screeches to callers on NTT's "apology" line. "I understand. I'll do anything. Please forgive me. I'm awful. Forgive me, forgive me."

"I've heard so much about you," says a man on the "compliment" line. "You're so popular, I envy you. Golf, tennis, any sport you can do with a master style."

Callers may listen to the roar of a giant iguana, a ghost speaking through an "itako" or shaman, or the rumble of an iceberg breaking up off Siberia in the Sea of Okhotsk.

The tapes, which also include information on the weather, shopping and child care, brought in $100 million in revenue last year, the company reports.

They also brought their share of criticism when, last December, NTT reported some 200,000 callers requested the number for a line featuring a group of young Japanese women describing their favourite moments in lovemaking.

NTT quickly disconnected "College Girls' Tittle Tattle" after a lawmaker for the Communist party, which considers itself a monitor of the public morals, denounced it in the Diet (Parliament).

However, on the "flattery" line, two young women continue to fight for the caller's affections.

"You feel more tenderly toward Yuriko, but I love you. I'm sorry but I love you, I love you," a soft-spoken woman named Kazuko says.

"Kazuko's photograph is repulsive," cries bubbly Yuriko. "Whom do you like best?"

THE POPULARITY of the tapes shows "that NTT people have become more flexible, more creative and more market-oriented – even money-oriented – since privatization," said NTT spokesman Yoshiaki Hisamoto.

Aimed at distracting crank callers from bothering real people, as well as raising revenue, each of the recorded services attracts about 600 callers a day, Hisamoto said.

"We expect mostly young people make the calls, but there are a lot of frustrated, middle-aged executives in Japan and I'm sure many of them enjoy the tapes," he added.

"They can fantasize that it's real life, but I doubt the calls are a good remedy for their frustration."

Since NTT went private last April, President Hisashi Shinto has launched more than 30 subsidiaries in businesses ranging from underground telecommunication cable maintenance to market research by telephone.

The 75-year-old engineer, credited with leading the Japanese shipbuilding industry to world prominence before taking over as head of NTT in 1981, has cut costs and assigned redundant workers within the 310,000-strong work force to the new offshoots.

"You're unhappy," a man says. "Please tell me what's wrong. (Pause. Soft background music builds). I understand."

Capital ideas

The summer doldrums gave way to a rush of activity this week, and the amount of progress made may well justify one regarding the past few days as the beginning of an entirely new period.

No, we are not referring to Taba and the Egyptian summit, although those who stayed with that long-running saga were rewarded with a tension-filled climax and a happy ending – even if they don't know where exactly border post No. 91 might be. We mean the move towards capital-market reform.

Much has been written around this topic, in this column as elsewhere. No apology is necessary for that, nor for the fact that a great deal more will follow in the coming months. This reform, along with that of the tax system, are the two central issues in the economy, and it is this one that is being concentrated on by the government. Just how far advanced the planning is only became clear this week, when the Treasury and Bank of Israel revealed that they have very firm ideas. Off the record, they admit to working on a projected timetable of action that will probably result in the legislation involved in these reforms dominating the coming Knesset session.

"Capital market reform" as a topic for discussion has been around for a decade, if not longer. In recent months it has moved to centre stage for two reasons. First, the Bejski Commission's report revealed even to those who would rather have remained ignorant, just how bad the situation has become with regard to government control of capital raising, the inefficacy of some regulatory institutions and the lack of cooperation between all of them, the gross conflicts of interest stemming from the banks' numerous roles, and how all these conspired to produce the regulation system for the bank shares and its eventual demise in October 1983.

Second, the government's huge tax revenues, following the fall in inflation rates and the extra levies passed last year, led to a budget surplus in the early part of the fiscal year, while at the same time the dire shortage of capital in the corporate sector threatened to topple a growing number of companies.

The solution to this novel situation was to reduce the government's borrowing in the bond market and open the way for the private-sector to raise their own funds. Despite the very high cost of this borrowing, several hundred million dollars has been raised so far. But the whole procedure, including the need for approval from the Treasury, Securities Authority and the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange on each issue, and the fact that most of the actual borrowing was done by bank finance subsidiaries, all highlighted the unsatisfactory way in which the markets operate.

The "Shultz letter" from the secretary of state to the prime minister, and the even clearer warnings made by the U.S. ambassador when he visited the Tase last Monday, were a further source of pressure – this time external – pushing for meaningful changes.

As it happened though, they were already in the pipeline.

Finance Minister Moshe Nissim startled the ministerial committee appointed to discuss the Bejski recommendations, when he turned up at a supposedly regular meeting on Tuesday and presented a short, but direct, paper outlining the most sweeping changes ever contemplated by the government.

Under these proposals, the state would finally free the markets, both quantitatively and qualitatively, by raising less money, eliminating distortions and tax advantages, and pressing ahead with a gradual delinkage programme for new bond issues. It even undertook not to give out any more subsidized credit. Nissim backed up this plan by hammering home its corollary – that the government budget would have to be trimmed further and kept under the tightest control if the reforms were to work.

He then went off to Washington to receive Shultz's blessing, and he will be joined there by the heads of the Treasury and Bank of Israel, as well as the prime minister himself. It is there that the next major moves in this reshaping of the Israeli economy will take place. When the travellers return, they intend to start translating the blueprint into reality.

Greek tourism officials due here

By GREER FAY CASHMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A high-level delegation of Greek officials is to come to Israel later this month to arrange for a visit by National Economy Minister Kostas Simitis.

Simitis has accepted an invitation from Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir, who was in Greece earlier this year.

The date for his arrival has not yet been set. The major topics to be discussed will be cooperation in promoting tourism from the U.S. and the Far East and the development of tourist sea traffic between Israel and Greece.

Dow Jones plummets in hectic trading

NEW YORK. – Sell orders that reached frenzied levels put the Dow Jones Industrials Average into its steepest one-day decline ever yesterday on some of the heaviest turnover ever seen in the market.

The Dow, the most widely followed market indicator, plummeted 87 points to finish at 1793 on volume of 204 million shares. The number of declining stocks led advancing ones by a 16 to 1 ratio. The decline far surpassed the previous one-day record of 61.87 set July 7 and was just short of the record 237 million share turnover of August 3, 1984.

Only 2 weeks ago, the market surged to an all-time high of 1919.71.

Traders and messengers stampeded on and off the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, screaming and shouting as they tried to unload vast quantities of stock. At one point the trading was so heavy the ticker that records the lastest trades fell 14 minutes behind.

"I've never seen such tension of the floor," said Robert Mirabil, a trader for the investment firm of Thomas KcKinnon. Jack Conlon, E.F. Hutton's director of institutional trading described the atmosphere as "borderline maniacal."

Analysts could not attribute the wave of selling to any single development yesterday, but most agreed that investors were concerned about rising interest rates, a trend that began about a week ago.

In the credit markets yesterday, prices of long-term U.S. government bonds, which move in the opposite direction of interest rates, dropped more than $20 for every $1,000 of face value.

The upsurge in interest rates has been widely attributed to waning hopes that the Federal Reserve would take further steps to relax its credit policy. Recent economic data have indicated that the U.S. economy is picking up momentum, after showing signs of sluggishness earlier in the year. Thus, the Fed may feel there is no need to stimulate the economy with lower interest rates.

But Wall Street has some doubts that the latest economic statistics will necessarily lead to improved corporate earnings. Traders essentially pick stocks on the basis of the anticipated profits of companies.

Market analyst John Connolly of Dean Witter Reynolds said a drop in stock index futures at yesterday's opening caused a huge discount to the cash index, triggering sell programmes by arbitragers. He noted that the futures market "influences everybody's behaviour whether they are involved in it or not."

E.F. Hutton's Conlon said the sell-off could go on for two or three sessions but "it may well turn out to be the catharsis that the market needed" after advancing to record highs. (AP, Reuter)

Dollar up sharply on mark; gold down

The dollar advanced strongly on most world currency markets yesterday, as the price of gold was mixed but continued near the $400-an-ounce level.

In London, the U.S. currency finished at 2.091 Deutschmarks, compared with 2.0635 on Wednesday, while the pound sterling closed at $1.4695, compared with $1.4825 Wednesday. Against the yen, the dollar did less well, advancing to just 156.35 at closing from 155.3 on Wednesday.

In Frankfurt, where many dealers had gone short on dollars in the morning in anticipation of further weakening in the U.S. unit, the dollar ended up rebounding in later trading. It closed at 2.0845 marks, well above Wednesday's 2.0625. In Tokyo, the dollar fell back 0.15 yen against the Japanese currency, finishing at 155.35.

London dealers said there were no specific factors to support the market's sudden enthusiasm for the dollar. The main reason appeared to be today's announcement of U.S. retail sales and producer price data, which are expected to be better than earlier forecasts.

Gold, meanwhile, closed at $405.50, down $12 from the Wednesday night close in London. In New York the metal gained slightly to $407.75 an ounce from Wednesday's $404.30.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Oil companies to offer plan to buy stake in Refineries

The chief shareholders of the big three energy companies agreed to present plans by the middle of next month to buy part of the government's stake in Oil Refineries Ltd. at a meeting with Energy Minister Moshe Shahal yesterday in Tel Aviv.

Shahal told them that in addition to acquiring stakes in the Haifa-based refinery, the three energy companies should also initiate cooperative ventures as well.

The plan to sell part of the government's take in the refineries is part of a package of reforms aimed at deregulating the energy sector. Among the changes proposed would be to open the government monopoly on fuel imports to competition.

Shahal called on the energy companies – Paz Oil Co., Delek Fuel Corp. and Sonol Ltd. – not to block the deregulation efforts.

ISRAEL BOND SALES in the first eight months of 1986 increased $51 million from a year earlier to $332.96m, David B. Hermelin, chairman of the Israel Bond Organization said yesterday.

Speaking at the organization's annual National Leadership Conference, Hermelin attributed the increase to growing confidence in Israel's economic recovery, notably the sharp reduction in inflation and the country's willingness to accept the austerity programme imposed by the government in July 1985.

POTATO AND CARROT GROWERS are threatening to stop selling their produce if the government does not authorize a price hike.

The price of the two vegetables – the only two still subject to price controls – was last set in September 1985 at 83 agorot a kilogram.

Agriculture Ministry economists back figures prepared by the Vegetable Marketing Board showing that growers have been losing on every kilogram of carrots and potatoes they have sold since July 15.

Moriah renting Tel Aviv Plaza

Post Economic Staff

Moriah Hotels Ltd. yesterday signed a 10-year agreement to rent the Plaza Tel Aviv Hotel, starting January 1. The financial terms of the accord were not disclosed.

Under the pact, Moriah will operate the hotel, to be renamed the Moriah Plaza Tel Aviv, independently of the hotel building's owners, although it will retain the Plaza's staff.

For the past two years, the Plaza has been managed by its owners, four West German Jews. The Moriah chain currently comprises four hotels in Jerusalem, Eilat, Ein Boqeq and on the shore of the Dead Sea. The addition of the Plaza fits into Moriah's marketing programme, according to General Manager Yair Youtzis.

"Experience has shown that the Moriah Jerusalem has frequently been included in tour packages that were based on five-star hotels in the Tel Aviv area," he said in a statement.

Comment

The dollar traded in narrow ranges late afternoon yesterday as the market awaited U.S. money-supply data. It was bolstered by rumours that today's U.S. retail sales report for August would show a rise of as much as 4 per cent. Higher U.S. interest rates and a belief the Fed would not ease policy further also helped. A stock market slump was shrugged off.

Alexandria and beyond

DIFFICULTIES in the negotiation of peace, the prime minister observed just before boarding the plane to Alexandria yesterday morning, are preferable to the dangers stemming from a return to the policy of confrontation. Truer words were never said.

The difficulties Shimon Peres was referring to were plainly of two kinds. There were the past difficulties on the road to Alexandria, the removal of which required at one critical point the near-recall of the Israeli delegation to the Taba talks. And then there were the future difficulties in reaching new agreements for peace that would be likely to arise in Alexandria and beyond. These difficulties started at home.

The fact is that both Israel and Egypt are racked by internal debates on the right way of treating the other signatory to the peace treaty.

Egypt's official policy is based on a formal commitment to the treaty, whose translation into "active peace" is, however, to be contingent, even after the settlement of the Taba issue, on progress towards resolving the Palestinian problem. The rejectionist parties inside, let alone outside, Hosni Mubarak's regime, are plumping, at a minimum, for avoidance of anything better than "passive peace" so long as Israel refuses to endorse Egypt's Palestinian formula, complete with self-determination and an independent state to be achieved through a dictatorial big-power chaired conference.

What both schools of Egyptian thought agree upon is that the autonomy plan outlined by Menachem Begin and Anwar Sadat at Camp David is now dead as a dodo.

Self-determination for the Palestinians is, needless to say, anathema to both major partners in Israel's national unity government. This negative commitment is enshrined in the government's policy guidelines, in the form of a rejection of any idea of a Palestinian state and of talks with the PLO. But the guidelines, stitched together as they were from fragments of Likud and Alignment planks, are a trifle ambiguous on the autonomy: on the one hand they reaffirm the Camp David Framework for Peace, on the other hand they pledge the government to considering other – and presumably contrary – proposals made by Jordan in peace talks.

What is open to Jordan should presumably be open to Egypt, too. And by the same token there should be no bar to Israel itself readying in advance replies to possible Arab proposals, which might diverge from the Camp David lines. The Knesset has approved a scheme suggested by Mr. Peres for an international "umbrella" over direct peace negotiations, for which there is no warrant in the guidelines.

Nevertheless it is true that Israel's government consensus, as articulated by the guidelines, is inextricably wedded to the autonomy, and it is within these guidelines that Mr. Peres undertook to keep his summit talks with Mr. Mubarak. It is also true that the autonomy, originally a constructive step to the solution of the Palestinian problem, at least as it pertained to the territories, has become a dead weight on any hope for a wider peace.

Negotiations on the design of the autonomy no sooner started after the signing of the 1979 peace treaty with Egypt than the Likud government's intention became clear: to translate the promise of "self rule" for the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza into – as this newspaper described it at the time – a glorified garbage collection agency, which would after the five-year "transitional period" be incorporated into the system of Israel's sovereign rule over Greater Eretz Yisrael, and would be declared a solution to the Palestinian problem.

The Egyptians, however, had other ideas, and it did not take them very long to call the talks off. The Jordanians, whose collaboration under the Camp David agreement was essential, never joined in. The autonomy plan emerged as a non-starter: and when Yitzhak Shamir insists, as he did yesterday, that the Palestinian problem must find its solution "within the framework of the Camp David agreements," he is in effect plumping for a continued stalemate.

Mr. Peres, who yesterday described an "active peace" with Egypt a condition of an expanded regional peace, knows full well that the reverse is also true. But then Mr. Peres, unlike Mr. Shamir, believes – and so stated in Alexandria – that "we" do not wish to have dominion over another people. The Likud-shaped autonomy plan is an instrument for domination over the Palestinians.

The Egyptians may be wrong on everything else, but they are right about the autonomy.

specialize in international law, people with rich experience in arbitration."

The Egyptian delegation head, Dr. Nabil el-Arabi, made two speeches, a short one in English for the world, and a longer one in Arabic. In the second speech he referred to the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and their right to self-determination, statements that were not received well by the Israelis in the room.

It was understood, however, that his Arabic rendition was intended for internal consumption, and was thus allowed to pass. After the document was signed, one Israeli delegate who had followed the process from the start said that it was hard to believe how much energy had gone into working out the compromis. There had been several points along the way, he said, during which it seemed certain that either the Egyptians or the Israelis would walk out. "But all is well that ends well," he said, adding that he hoped he would never have to go through another experience like it.

President Reagan yesterday lauded Peres's "diplomatic vision." In a congratulatory letter, Reagan wrote, "Your diplomatic vision allowed you to overcome the obstacles and differences of opinion and to see beyond the great achievements that will grow out of the arbitration agreement.

"The historic dialogue between Egypt and Israel, at this high level, should serve as a sign to countries in the region."

saying: "What a person does in his leisure time is nobody's business, and there is no proof that Suissa did anything wrong while on the job."

The sixth allegation claimed that Suissa had appointed as a chief warden a person unfit for the job out of a personal obligation to him. Bar-Lev admitted that the man was an alcoholic and unfit for the job, but said that the appointment was the result of Suissa's misjudgment.

At the end of the committee meeting, some members expressed dissatisfaction with Bar-Lev's decision to keep Suissa on as commissioner and with the fact that the minister had so far not allowed them to read the report.

"I like Suissa and respect him, but the report's findings are very serious and cast doubt on Suissa's ability to be Prisons Service commissioner," Mordechai Virshubski (Shinui) later told The Jerusalem Post.

Committee chairman Dov Shilanski adjourned the meeting after Adan said the findings of his report were more serious than Bar-Lev had indicated. Further deliberations were postponed until next Thursday to allow committee members to read the report in the minister's office.

After the Taba 'sideshow'

ARYEH NAOR

THE UPS and downs of the current Israeli-Egyptian negotiating process should be analysed. Israel has expressed a much stronger and deeper desire to have the Peres-Mubarak summit and no wonder – this country's desire for peace has always been stronger and deeper. And a summit symbolizes and strengthens peace more than anything else.

Prime Minister Peres's instruction to the Israeli negotiating team in Cairo to return home on Wednesday night was no mere emotional reaction to the feeling that the negotiating process had become degrading.

Beyond satisfying a deep psychological need, the brinkmanship tactics had a manipulative function. By showing that he was ready to give up the summit, Peres persuaded the Egyptians to reconsider their approach and to initiate a renewal of the talks.

It happens from time to time that a negotiating process fails just because one side has been too eager for success. Mutual misconceptions develop when the over-excited side creates the impression that it is ready to pay any price.

So much do they want it, the other side may think, they will agree to my terms. When he realizes that there is a limit, that his demands are not going to be met, it may be too late. The gap between the concrete positions seems even deeper and wider than it really is. Refusal is interpreted as unreasonable stubbornness.

Peres and his party wanted a summit for obvious political and personal reasons, and perhaps that was the basis for an Egyptian misperception and miscalculation. Perhaps Cairo thought Peres was ready to pay almost any price for having the summit before the rotation and therefore hardened its claims on the Taba issue.

Peres was not ready to accept any Egyptian position, even if it meant giving up the summit, and shortly after his brinkmanship instruction to the Israeli team, the Egyptians reread the map, this time correctly. It was the brinksmanship initiative that made the summit possible.

THIS WAS not the first time in the course of the Israeli-Egyptian peace process that a demonstration was needed that Israel was not ready to give whatever asked. Nor was it the first time that only by such a demonstration did the negotiating process escape an inevitable failure. This happened more than once before, during and after Camp David.

Menachem Begin, who started it all with the initiatives taken immediately after his electoral victory in 1977, had to face charges that he was endangering the prospects of peace by his stubbornness. Nevertheless he insisted on what he believed to be essential for Israel until he persuaded presidents Sadat and Carter that under certain conditions he could give up the negotiations, but he would never give in on Jerusalem, Judea and Samaria and the settlement policy.

Only when it was clearly understood that not by all means was Israel ready to sign the peace treaty did it become feasible. The Americans and Egyptians realized that by demanding more concessions from Israel they endangered even those that had been accepted. This was the turning point that made the breakthrough possible.

By using more or less the same technique Peres can achieve what he is really after without giving away more than what is, to the best of his judgement, objectively necessary. Exercising brinkmanship is easier for Peres than it was for Begin for three main reasons.

When Begin negotiated, he faced a choice between peace itself and the future of Eretz Israel, this way or the other. The fate of the nation was at stake. With all due given the Taba dispute and the importance of a summit with Egypt, the situation is incomparable with the dilemmas Begin faced.

Secondly, Peres does not have to withstand American pressure. Having friendly Ronald Reagan in the White House is very different from having Jimmy Carter there, whose ideological goals were nearer to the Arab stand than to Israel's. The Reagan approach is much more convenient for Jerusalem, and the absence of American pressure makes it easier to resist Egyptian tactics. In fact, Washington has put pressure on Cairo.

Thirdly, there is no "Summit Now" movement to weaken Peres at home. It really is easier to exercise brinkmanship without a meaningful opposition calling for concessions.

SO FAR this analysis has not dealt with strategic considerations. But one must look beyond the summit at the strategic meaning and historical context of events. The summit is not an end in itself but a means to improve relations and strengthen peace. Mere tactics will not achieve these goals.

For a real improvement in our relationship, Israel must first convince Egypt that we have never tried to take advantage of the peace treaty and the Taba annexe. Once the arbitration process is finished, the decision should be honoured and carried out without any sophistry. Secondly we cannot disregard the connection between maintaining peace with Egypt and advancing towards a reasonable solution to the Palestinian problem.

The framework of the peace treaty is a comprehensive peace, and Israel has already agreed that the Palestinian people have "legitimate rights" and "just requirements" and that they "also" should be taken into consideration. Even earlier the U.S. and Israel agreed that Egypt should participate in determining the future of the West Bank and Gaza, whose permanent status, according to the Camp David Accords, will be determined in concert by Israel, Jordan, Egypt and representatives of the Administrative Council.

It is unrealistic and against the basic interests of Israel to try to disconnect the peace with Egypt from its comprehensive framework. No good can come of this. True, significant improvement in relations with Cairo depend on more than resolving the Taba dispute. The Arab-Israeli conflict with the Palestinian issue as its centre will be the main issue between Jerusalem and Cairo.

It is about time that the Knesset and the political parties, as well as the cabinet, begin serious discussions of Israel's aims. The issue is too important to be left to be determined on the basis of mere tactics.

PEACE WITH EGYPT

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – Many people assert that responsibility for the cold peace between Israel and Egypt is the fault of Israel: our invasion of Lebanon, our failure to move on the Palestinian question, our intransigence on Taba.

It is naive to believe that our actions have chilled the peace. Egypt has powerful motives of her own for chilling the peace: to allay internal discontent against the regime: and to regain its place in the Arab world by honouring the mere formalities of peace and reneging on the content and spirit of a just peace.

Egypt never had any intention of honouring the spirit of peace, after it received back all of Sinai. It was not and is not in its national self-interest to do so today either. It was assisted in pursuing its national policies by those Israelis who argue so persuasively for the formula of "land for peace." The formula is absurd. Giving land is a fait accompli, a one-time 100 per cent unilateral action on our part that does not permit us legally to reoccupy 50 per cent of Sinai if Egypt honours only 50 per cent of the peace treaty. On the other hand, Egypt is free to define the content and the spirit of the peace it bestows on us as it pleases.

Egypt can and will go to war with us if and when it suits its purpose. In return for Sinai, Yamit, and Taba (which will be granted to Egypt by the terms of the negotiations to which we have agreed), we have a cease-fire, an Israeli flag flying in Cairo, the privilege of contributing to Egyptian tourism and reading the vicious anti-Semitic attacks on Israel in the government-controlled press, and the chance to die for our country as tourists at Ras Burka.

I am not angry at the Egyptians. They know their self-interest and pursue it. My anger is directed against our own people who are blind to our national self-interest and make the Egyptian task easier.

NEVE SHALOM

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – In response to Professor Rita Watson's letter of September 4, I would like to point out that Neve Shalom is based on the idea of cooperation between Palestinians and Jews, and it is a community where different people with different perceptions can live together with a diversity of viewpoints. Before giving my own perceptions to the visitors, they viewed a videotape in which many different people from Neve Shalom presented many different ideas. After the videotape, I explained that the idea of Neve Shalom is a pluralistic one, so in addition to providing information on the community in general, the group also had the opportunity to discuss my ideas.

My belief is that coexistence must be based on equal rights for the two people, including national rights. Since the Jews have already achieved this goal, it is important to work for national rights for Palestinians as well.

It is clear that I believe in dialogue, otherwise I would not live at Neve Shalom. But social-political changes must be made as well as changes in human relations if we are to have peace.

ALL ABOUT CHICAGO

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – In the view of your learned reviewer Ralph Amelan (September 5), "nobody in his right mind could ever accuse Chicago" of having such things as "ancient buildings, spacious parks, an atmosphere of culture and civilization... Chicago means crime."

Well, yes, the colourful image of the Chicago gangsters of 60 years ago has stuck in the provincial imagination. But better informed people know a different Chicago: a city of distinguished universities, libraries, and museums, with a rich musical, literary, and theatrical culture.

As for buildings, Chicago's are of course not "ancient," but their elegant, innovative architecture has for a century set trends in the United States and elsewhere, as has the city's vast, splendidly planned park system. Serious people come from all parts of the world to study and admire both.

Finally, Chicago today has, believe it or not, one of the lowest crime rates of any major American city.

YOUTH ALIYA

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – With reference to Joel Rebibo's article of August 29 about immigrant pupils, I wish to point out that I do not run the Youth Aliya office in Jerusalem. There is more than one office or department in Youth Aliya, each responsible for a different area of endeavour. I am employed by the counselling service which assists new immigrant children. This department is headed by Dr. Yitzhak Mendelson.

MORTGAGES FOR NEW IMMIGRANTS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – I refer to some of your recent articles about mortgages for new immigrants and wish to point out that the Ministry of Absorption does not impose limitations on new immigrants as to the size of the flat they purchase. It must be remembered that today's mortgages ($40,000 for a family of two to four members) include a grant of $25,000. Today, mortgages for new immigrants are almost double those given to Israelis and conditions of repayment are much easier for them. Mortgages for Israelis are governed by certain criteria and by the individual's income, whereas the Ministry of Absorption does not apply an income test to new immigrants, since it believes that its purpose is to help all immigrants to settle in Israel. However, if a new immigrant has the means to buy a flat of 100 to 120 square metres for instance, it is only fair that he receive less than an immigrant without such means.

With regard to South African Jews, a special meeting of the Government-Jewish Agency Coordinating Committee under the joint chairmanship of the Prime Minister and the Chairman of the Agency, decided to bend the rules in view of the special situation.

In the last two months since the new housing plan initiated by the Minister of Absorption was put into effect, 1,500 immigrants applied to banks for entitlement certificates and 600 of them used them, whereas only 2,000 immigrants applied to the banks in the entire previous year.

We hope that the improvement in the amount of the mortgage and the conditions of repayment will solve most of the housing problems of new immigrants.

YAEL NACHMIAS,
Assistant to the Minister of Absorption
Jerusalem.

MUTUAL TOLERANCE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – Rabbi Ralph Pelcovitz's letter of August 11 combines condescension with arrogance. He maintains that the Ministry for Religious Affairs challenges the legitimacy of Conservative and Reform rabbis only, but not their congregants. This implies that Reform and Conservative Jews, like sheep, blindly follow their leaders. While some Orthodox submit their minds to their rebbes, Conservative and Reform Jews determine their affiliation by conscious choice.

Pelcovitz urges Conservative and Reform rabbis to mute their "shrill demand" for recognition, lest they upset the regulations "...which have successfully kept religious peace, order and unity among the diverse elements of Israeli society..." Peace? Order? Unity? Strange terms to describe vandalism, arson, assault and desecration of holy books.

Pelcovitz further suggests that non-Orthodox rabbis devote their time to education, charity and community affairs. Surely not education, Rabbi, lest they lead even more innocents astray. That leaves fund-raising.

Reform and Conservative Jews are not of one mind. But if discrimination against them persists, especially in amendments to the Law of Return, many may decline to support a state which denies legitimacy to them or to their rabbis. If Rabbi Pelcovitz is truly desirous of promoting unity, he should encourage mutual tolerance and respect.

JONATHAN FREILICH
South Euclid, Ohio.

UNIVERSITY "DEPOSIT"

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, – It was profoundly disturbing to learn that, in addition to the very high fees, university students this year are to be charged an extra NIS 1,500 "deposit" – a euphemism for loan – returnable at graduation. In a country where men and women give several years of their lives to the army and are demobilised penniless at an age where their overseas counterparts are already graduating and ready for lucrative jobs, this is patently unfair.

As a result only the elite few (and this means those whose parents can afford it) will be able to consider a university education. This will be one more burden on parents whose adult children emerge from the army both unprepared to be self-supporting and physically ready to marry and establish families.

If young people intellectually capable of an academic education are deprived of it for financial reasons, Israeli society will suffer the greatest loss. We will also lose out in the field of research. Israel is a small nation on the periphery of Western civilization. To deprive our youth of the possibility of university education is to doom ourselves to isolation and intellectual stagnation.

The budget cuts to education are frightening. Higher education should never be a luxury available to a chosen few. We must continue to broaden our horizons and re-think our priorities.
